TE: Oronde Gadsden (S) (TE16 | $6 | 10.04), AJ Barner (TE24 | $2 | 12.04)

There is a version of ochidam's 2026 season where CeeDee Lamb carries the team on his back and everything else quietly works out, but that version requires a lot of quiet working out. Lamb projects as WR5, a genuine weapon, yet the rest of the projected starters grade out as thoroughly ordinary: Lamar Jackson at QB3 is legitimate, but he comes paired with Baker Mayfield at QB18 and a receiving corps that leans heavily on names like Parker Washington and Oronde Gadsden, a WR35 and TE16 respectively who represent the soft underbelly of this roster. Washington's 2025 production was a real surprise given how crowded the Jacksonville depth chart was around him, but whether that role holds with Travis Hunter now in the mix is a genuine open question, not a settled answer. The draft board offered little relief, logging zero steals and one major reach in Elijah Sarratt at WR98, taken nearly six and a half rounds before his ADP. Sitting 12th in the division and in the 14th percentile of the field, ochidam is not a team that needs one thing to go right. It needs several.

dgfisher enters 2026 sitting 11th in the Aloy division and in just the 19th percentile of the field, and the roster does not suggest a dramatic reversal is coming. The top of the lineup has genuine appeal, Justin Jefferson at WR6 and Colston Loveland at TE3 are legitimate difference-makers, and dgfisher clearly believed in Loveland and Harold Fannin early enough to reach on both in the draft. That conviction cost draft capital and produced a TE3 and a TE6, which is a reasonable trade on paper, but the rest of the roster is where the math gets cruel. Josh Jacobs grades out at RB16, Cam Skattebo at RB20, and the projected starters thin out quickly after Jefferson, with Marvin Harrison Jr. at WR33 and Jayden Reed at WR48 rounding out the receiving corps. Zero steals, zero values, and fifteen chalk picks in a tournament where outpacing the field requires finding edges nobody else found, dgfisher drafted a roster that looks exactly like what it is: a team that followed the consensus all the way to the bottom third of the standings.

The Sycamore Boys are sitting at tenth in the Aloy division and the 25th percentile of the field, and it is genuinely difficult to find the argument that changes that trajectory. Christian McCaffrey at RB3 and Tyler Warren at TE4 are real building blocks, but the draft sheet surrounding them reads like a series of small surrenders: four minor reaches, two major reaches, and just two values across the entire roster. Romeo Doubs, taken two full rounds ahead of his ADP, grades out at WR53, and the projected weakest starter is Brenton Strange at TE17, a depth piece elevated to a meaningful role. The core is not broken, but McCaffrey and Warren are essentially being asked to drag the rest of the lineup somewhere it is not equipped to go. Without a surplus of draft capital recovered through value picks, there is no obvious offseason lever left to pull, no late-round windfall waiting to announce itself. Some teams rebuild quietly. This one just looks stuck.

There is a particular kind of exhaustion that sets in when you look at a roster and realize the problems are structural, not fixable. pwalker7107 sits ninth in the Aloy division and projects at just the 27th percentile of the field, and the draft didn't do much to change the math. The team landed three values against six reaches, including a pair of major ones: Chris Bell at WR87 and Michael Mayer at TE39, taken 4.4 and 5.5 rounds early respectively, burning late capital on players who weren't worth it. The top of the roster is real, Bijan Robinson at RB2, De'Von Achane at RB6, and Ashton Jeanty at RB7 form a genuinely elite tier of projected starters, but the drop-off is steep and unforgiving. J.K. Dobbins, the projected weakest starter at RB36, is returning from a Lisfranc injury into a Denver backfield that already has RJ Harvey and now Jonah Coleman competing for carries. That's the lever pwalker7107 needed to pull, and it was already loose before the season starts.

JayhawkLegion sits at eighth in the Aloy Division and inside the bottom third of the entire field, and the draft sheet does not offer much reason for optimism. The wide receiver group looks like the roster's best asset on paper, with George Pickens (WR10), Chris Olave (WR11), and Tetairoa McMillan (WR15) all projecting as starters, but that surface-level shine disappears fast when you notice Pickens was the team's most significant draft investment and he was still reached for 0.7 rounds early, meaning JayhawkLegion paid a premium to land its own cornerstone. Quarterback is a quiet disaster, with Cam Ward (QB23) and Kirk Cousins (QB35) offering the kind of ceiling that makes you wince. The one thread of genuine hope is Quinshon Judkins (RB22), who showed real promise before a fractured fibula cut his previous season short and is reportedly on track for training camp, but banking a season on a player returning from that kind of injury is less a strategy than a prayer. There is no obvious lever left to pull here, just a roster asking you to believe everything breaks right at once.

BustyChuckBass sits 7th in the Aloy division and at the 32nd percentile of the field, and the roster tells you why without much ambiguity. The receiver group has genuine appeal, A.J. Brown at WR8, Malik Nabers at WR12, and Luther Burden at WR22 forming a legitimate top tier, but Burden cost a round-and-a-half of draft capital before his ADP and Brown and Nabers are doing most of the actual heavy lifting. Strip away those names and the drop-off is steep: Christian Watson at WR28, Quentin Johnston at WR41, and a quarterback room where Brock Purdy at QB13 and Jared Goff at QB16 are projecting as average starters at best. The 2025 season ended at the 30th percentile in scoring, and nothing in this draft, which produced zero steals and two major reaches, suggests a meaningful correction is coming. BustyChuckBass has enough name recognition on paper to look competitive in a casual glance, and not quite enough substance to do anything about it when it matters.

mikek1 sits at 52nd percentile in 2026, which sounds unremarkable until you notice the foundation underneath. Amon-Ra St. Brown (WR4), Drake London (WR7), and DeVonta Smith (WR17) form a projected starting core that would be the envy of most rosters in this field, and the Jalen Hurts / Smith stack gives mikek1 a genuine ceiling-raiser when Philadelphia's offense clicks. That upside is real. The margin question is whether it gets unlocked consistently, because Hurts (QB9) was a value grab at 5.11 but carries the week-to-week variance every dual-threat quarterback does, and his backup role falls to Kyler Murray (QB19), the team's weakest projected starter. mikek1 drafting mostly chalk with a handful of minor reaches suggests a manager who trusted the board rather than chasing upside, which is disciplined, not uninspired. After a 99th-percentile scoring season in 2025, the expectations are baked in. This team will not sneak up on anyone, which means every close week matters, and there will be close weeks.

LesStarkWinterfell did not try to be clever. They just kept winning the pick. Derrick Henry falling more than two rounds past his ADP to land at RB12 is the kind of draft-room gift that changes a team's floor, and pairing him with Jonathan Taylor at RB4 means this roster starts two legitimate impact backs without sacrificing position elsewhere. Matthew Stafford slipping more than a round past his number gave the team a QB14 at a discount that most managers simply left on the board. The one blemish worth noting is Alec Pierce, taken more than two rounds early at WR32, and his offseason ankle surgery and PUP list status add real uncertainty to what was already an aggressive price. Still, the roster's profile is one of consistent forward movement, eleven picks at or above value against four reaches, with the biggest gains coming at the spots that matter most. Sitting fifth in the Aloy division and at the 56th percentile, LesStarkWinterfell has the profile of a team that outperformed the room quietly and is waiting to make some noise.

TE:

The Texas Fireclaws sit at 64th percentile and fourth in the Aloy division, and that placement actually undersells how cleanly this roster came together. There was no single flashy moment, just a draft that kept finding the better side of the ledger. Jayden Daniels fell nearly two full rounds past his ADP before Texas grabbed him at 4.09, giving the team a QB5 who cost like a fringe starter. RJ Harvey slid more than two rounds before landing at 12.09, and Woody Marks dropped a staggering 3.6 rounds to fall into Texas's lap at 18.09. Three steals, one good value, and only two meaningful misses on the entire board. The biggest miss was Chris Brazzell II, taken more than six rounds early, but a late-round swing on an upside dart is forgivable when the rest of the draft looks this disciplined. Kenneth Walker III projects as RB10, Mike Evans brings proven production in a new situation with the 49ers, and the floor across the projected starters is genuinely hard to crack. This team did not win the draft on one pick. It won it on all of them.

There are drafts that win rounds, and then there are drafts that just quietly win, which is exactly what phialpha94 put together in the Aloy division. The foundation is receiver-led and formidable: Ja'Marr Chase at WR2 and Jaylen Waddle at WR23 give this roster a ceiling most managers would trade a kidney for, and Davante Adams, DK Metcalf, Courtland Sutton, and Michael Pittman extend that group well into starter-quality territory. At quarterback, Drake Maye landing at QB2 for a pick that came in half a round late is the kind of quiet edge that compounds over a full season. The real sleeper in the draft narrative, though, is Saquon Barkley, who slid a full round and a half past his ADP and landed at RB8 in phialpha94's lap, a gift the board simply handed over. Fourteen picks at chalk value and just three minor reaches tell you this manager was never chasing anything, just accumulating. The result is a roster sitting third in the division and in the 82nd tournament percentile, built not on one brilliant swing but on a draft that never lost a round.

Giskard did not build this roster with one flashy swing. They built it by being right, over and over, in the middle rounds of the draft. Joe Burrow at QB4 and Dak Prescott at QB7 both slid past their ADPs, and Giskard was there to collect both, adding genuine upside without overpaying. Puka Nacua at WR1 and Nico Collins at WR9 headline a receiving group that projects as one of the better units in the field, and Tucker Kraft at TE5 anchors a tight end group that would make most managers quietly envious. Yes, there were a couple of reaches late, Ray Davis and Jack Bech costing a little draft capital ahead of consensus, but those are round-sixteen gambles, not round-one sins. The result is a team that sits second in the Aloy Division and in the 85th percentile of the entire tournament field, not because one pick was transcendent, but because the draft as a whole kept coming out ahead.

TE:

JesseMilless sits first in the Aloy division and in the 94th percentile of the entire field, and the draft sheet explains exactly why. The steals alone tell the story: Omarion Hampton, projected RB9, slid nearly two full rounds past his ADP before JesseMilless made the call, and Kyren Williams, projected RB15, fell over three rounds before landing here. Those two acquisitions represent the kind of quiet, patient discipline that separates good drafters from great ones. Pair that with James Cook coming in at projected RB5 as a half-round value, and the top of this roster was built at a discount. Patrick Mahomes and Rashee Rice stack together in a partnership that needs no introduction. Rice required a one-round reach to secure, but buying a projected WR13 inside a Mahomes stack is a transaction most managers would sign without blinking. With just one minor reach across the entire board and seven values ranging from good to outright steals, this draft reads less like a fantasy roster and more like a blueprint.
