Minions of Mataeus drafted like a manager who kept second-guessing the board and then overcorrected every single time. The most damning entry on the ledger is Patrick Mahomes, a QB12 in a positionless format, taken at 3.06 when his ADP sat at 5.08, burning premium draft capital on a quarterback position that needed no such urgency. That reach alone might be forgivable in isolation, but it wasn't isolation, it was a pattern: Stefon Diggs, a WR56, pulled 3.4 rounds early at pick 9.06, and Tyler Allgeier, a RB46, yanked 2.8 rounds early in round 12. The cumulative effect is a roster with zero steals, zero genuine values, and three major reaches defining the draft's skeleton. The top-end talent is real, Bijan Robinson at RB2 and Ashton Jeanty at RB7 are legitimate, but a manager who spent like this to build around them left significant production on the board that better-disciplined teams in the Altair division almost certainly collected. Fourth percentile in the field is the projection, and the draft process explains exactly why.

There is a moment in every bad draft where you can pinpoint exactly where things went wrong, and with shawn8386, it is the first pick. Taking Lamar Jackson at 1.03, a full round ahead of his ADP, set a tone the rest of the draft never recovered from. That early overpay compressed the value available downstream, and shawn8386 responded not by course-correcting but by doubling down, reaching on Jameson Williams by nearly two rounds at 3.03, then still somehow finding time in the late rounds to take Keon Coleman and Rashod Bateman a combined 6.4 rounds before either was remotely due. The roster ended up with zero steals and four major reaches across sixteen picks. The projected floor is Tony Pollard at RB30, which is not a foundation, it is a punchline. Jordan Love projects as QB17, and the scouting case for Love in fantasy has always been thinner than his NFL reputation suggests, which makes the Love stack with Christian Watson feel like a bet on vibes. The tournament percentile here is 8th. That number does the real work.

TylerTaylor2022 sits 10th in the Altair division and in the 18th percentile of the field, and the draft record does not offer much reason for optimism. The most damning detail is the quarterback situation: three of the four signal-callers on the roster were major reaches, with J.J. McCarthy arriving a staggering 5.2 rounds ahead of his ADP and Shedeur Sanders and Tyler Shough pulled nearly as early, mortgaging real draft capital to acquire players ranked QB37, QB32, and QB20 respectively. That is a lot of picks spent chasing uncertain upside at a position where the returns have not materialized in the projections. The one genuine bright spot is a receiver group anchored by Amon-Ra St. Brown and CeeDee Lamb, two of the best at their position, but elite wideouts cannot carry a roster when the surrounding infrastructure is shaky. David Montgomery, now in Houston fighting for a backfield role he lost in Detroit, represents exactly the kind of low-ceiling depth this roster leans on. There is no obvious lever left to pull here.

TE: Dalton Schultz (S) (TE22 | $3 | 12.01), T.J. Hockenson (TE23 | $2 | 14.01)

There is a particular kind of exhaustion that comes not from catastrophe but from mediocrity that refuses to budge, and BPPosse knows it well. A 13-23 record in 2025 and a 19th-percentile scoring finish left little room for optimism, and the 2026 roster, sitting ninth in the Altair division and in just the 22nd percentile of the field, does not demand a reassessment. The real problem is that the ceiling is already visible. Jayden Daniels at QB5 is a genuine asset, and his stack with Terry McLaurin at WR24 gives the offense a coherent identity, but McLaurin is the WR24 on a team that needs a WR4 somewhere. Jonathan Taylor at RB4 and Saquon Barkley at RB8 are legitimate, but the rest of the projected starters grade out as filler, and Dalton Schultz at TE22 anchors the weakest projected starting spot on the roster. The draft did not help, producing two major reaches, including Pat Bryant taken nearly four rounds before his ADP, and zero steals. The levers have been pulled.

Feisty Kittens sit at 23rd percentile heading into 2026, and the roster map tells you why. The backfield is legitimately impressive, anchored by Christian McCaffrey (RB3), Kenneth Walker III (RB10), and Travis Etienne (RB18), but in a positionless format that top-end depth only carries you so far when the rest of the roster grades out soft. The receiver group is the quiet anchor dragging this ship, with Luther Burden (WR22) as the lone standout and Khalil Shakir (WR51) functioning as a projected starter. Shakir at WR51 is not a weapon, it is a white flag. The draft process did not help. Feisty Kittens burned a second-round pick on Caleb Williams (QB6) more than a round ahead of his market price, and reached nearly four and a half rounds early for Brandon Aiyuk (WR81), a player who grades out nowhere near his cost. Two major reaches on a roster that needed value, not sentiment. With 15 chalk picks and zero steals on the board, there is no hidden gem waiting to surface and rescue this season.

TE: Oronde Gadsden (S) (TE16 | $6 | 10.03)

PAKattack92 sits 7th in the Altair division and at just the 24th tournament percentile, and the roster data does not offer many reasons for optimism. The backfield is genuinely strong, with De'Von Achane (RB6) and Omarion Hampton (RB9) giving the team a legitimate foundation, and Joe Burrow (QB4) is a quality headliner. The trouble is that everything behind those names gets thin in a hurry. The receiver group grades out as average, and the projected weakest starter, Wan'Dale Robinson (WR47), is someone most contending rosters would rather not rely on. What makes the outlook harder to swallow is that the draft did not generate the surplus value needed to compensate for the ceiling. There were no steals, and the most aggressive move, taking Kyle Monangai (RB33) nearly two full rounds ahead of his ADP, looks like the kind of bet that eats into draft capital without delivering a difference-maker. Achane and Burrow are real, but in a format this deep, real is not always enough.

MichaelSicoli didn't build this roster on one bold swing. He built it by consistently coming out ahead, and the cumulative effect is a squad that sits at the 56th percentile in the tournament and belongs in any serious conversation. Josh Allen anchors everything as a QB1, while the tight end group quietly does enormous work: Colston Loveland projects at TE3, Isaiah Likely at TE13, and Chigoziem Okonkwo at TE19, giving Sicoli a positional advantage he can deploy across almost any lineup configuration. Nico Collins at WR9, Ladd McConkey at WR20, and Davante Adams at WR25 round out a starting corps that looks less like a gamble and more like homework. The one blemish on the draft card is Sam Darnold, taken 2.2 rounds ahead of his ADP at QB21, which is the kind of reach that looks fine if Allen stays healthy and puzzling if he doesn't. But one overcommitment does not define a draft this steady. Sicoli came in, did his work, and left with a roster that quietly checks most of the boxes.

There was no single flashy moment that defined joshlarky's 2026 draft, just a quiet accumulation of edges that added up to something real. The headliner is Justin Jefferson at WR6, snagged nearly a full round past his ADP at 2.09, which is the kind of discount that makes a roster. Pair him with Ja'Marr Chase at WR2 and you have a receiving foundation that most managers would trade half their bench to assemble. Brock Purdy stacks with both Mike Evans and George Kittle, which means joshlarky is running coordinated upside rather than scattered parts. The draft itself was methodical, fourteen chalk picks grounded in process, with values scattered throughout rather than concentrated in one lucky swing. Coming off a 94th-percentile scoring season in 2025, this roster looks like a deliberate attempt to build something sustainable rather than swing for variance. Sitting fifth in the Altair division at the 73rd tournament percentile, joshlarky is not a favorite, but this team belongs in the conversation.

After finishing in the bottom 10 percent of the field in 2026 scoring last season, First Down Final Boss has rebuilt itself into something that looks a great deal like a contender. The foundation is elite: Brock Bowers projects as TE1, and the manager landed him at pick 2.06 when his ADP sat nearly a round earlier, which is the kind of draft-room patience that turns good rosters into dangerous ones. Drake Maye at QB2 gives the lineup a genuine ceiling-raiser at the most important position, and Tee Higgins at WR19 and Kyle Pitts at TE7 ensure the top of this roster is not just deep but legitimately sharp. The one thread worth watching is Alec Pierce, a projected starter who brings WR32 upside as one of the league's premier big-play threats but is currently on the PUP list after offseason ankle surgery. If Pierce misses the first four games, the early-season scoring floor drops noticeably. Still, this roster sits at the 74th percentile of the field, fourth in the Altair Division, and looks built to make last year's misery feel like ancient history.

ThunderBoldtz did not build this roster by swinging for the fences and occasionally connecting. They built it by repeatedly coming out ahead, and the receiver group is where that discipline shows most clearly. Puka Nacua at WR1, A.J. Brown at WR8, George Pickens at WR10, DeVonta Smith at WR14, and Zay Flowers at WR16 are all projected starters, and that is not a fluke of positional depth, that is a manager who kept winning exchanges. The tight end work reinforces the point: Dalton Kincaid fell nearly one and a half rounds past his ADP before ThunderBoldtz picked him up at 9.01, and Dallas Goedert slid almost two full rounds before landing at 11.01. Neither acquisition required a gamble, just patience and recognition. The major reaches on Ray Davis and Keenan Allen are real blemishes, but they come late in the draft where the cost of being wrong shrinks considerably. Third in the Altair division and sitting in the top 10 percent of the field, ThunderBoldtz earned that position the boring way, which is usually the right way.

Kanedog sits second in the Altair division and at the 97th percentile of the entire field, and the draft record tells you exactly how it happened: six value picks, twelve chalk calls, and almost nothing wasted. The foundation is a receiving group that would make any manager envious, with Jaxon Smith-Njigba (WR3), Drake London (WR7), and Rashee Rice (WR13) all projected starters and all drafted right around where the market said they belonged. What quietly separates this roster is the tight end tier: Harold Fannin (TE6), Sam LaPorta (TE8), and Travis Kelce (TE10) were each taken a round or more after their ADP, which means Kanedog essentially got three top-ten tight ends at a discount while the rest of the room looked elsewhere. James Cook (RB5) fell a full round past his ADP as well, landing at 3.05 when consensus had him gone by 2.04. There are two major reaches on the board, Tua Tagovailoa and Ted Hurst, but with a floor this high, Kanedog can absorb the misses and barely flinch.

TE: Trey McBride (S) (TE2 | $53 | 2.05), Tucker Kraft (S) (TE5 | $23 | 6.05), Colby Parkinson (TE31 | $1 | 17.08)

The Tecmo Wildcats are sitting at 99th percentile and first in the Altair division, and the draft sheet tells you exactly why. This roster was built with patience and precision, and the value column is almost embarrassing in the best possible way. Trey McBride fell nearly a full round past his ADP and lands as the TE2, a foundational piece that most managers had to overpay for or go without. Bhayshul Tuten slipped two full rounds and projects as RB25, which is the kind of late-round gift that separates a good draft from a great one. Anchor those finds around Jahmyr Gibbs at RB1 and Tucker Kraft at TE5, and the Wildcats have a starting lineup that is difficult to attack from almost any angle. Five good values, two steals, and zero reaches across the entire board. That is not luck, that is discipline. When the draft board opens up and a manager keeps taking the right player at the right price, the results tend to look exactly like this.
