Remember the Titans! posted a 75th-percentile scoring season in 2025 and still finds itself projected dead last in the Angry Birds Space division, sitting in just the 11th percentile of the field, which tells you everything you need to know about where this roster stands heading into 2026. The foundation is genuinely good, Amon-Ra St. Brown at WR4 and De'Von Achane at RB6 are legitimate cornerstones, but the drop-off after the top tier is where the wheels come off. Baker Mayfield is the biggest concern: drafted as a minor reach in round five, he limped to a QB18 finish last season after a 2024 where he looked like a borderline elite option, and now Mike Evans is gone, leaving the manager to hope that Chris Godwin and Emeka Egbuka can coax a bounce-back from a QB whose floor just lowered. The draft itself leaned heavily on chalk, logging thirteen picks near consensus with only one identifiable steal, so there is no hidden upside waiting to be unlocked. This roster is roughly what it looks like, and right now, it does not look like enough.

TE:

There is no flattering spin available for DannyBKelly, an 11th-place finisher in the Angry Birds Space division projected at just the 18th percentile of the field. The draft was the original sin. Across 20 picks, DannyBKelly found zero steals and zero values, a clean sweep of futility, while logging five minor reaches and three major ones. The worst of those: Jaydon Blue, taken 7.2 rounds ahead of his ADP and projecting as RB70, a player who should not have been in anyone's conversation until the final rounds of a 24-round draft. Meanwhile, Patrick Mahomes lands as QB12, taken nearly a full round early, and comes with the asterisk-within-the-asterisk that his torn ACL and LCL from 2025 still have people genuinely unsure whether he starts Week 1. The fallback is Jayden Daniels at QB5, which is legitimately good, but the rest of the roster reads like a draft where the manager kept reaching for upside that the board never offered and paid full price for every mistake.

TE: Brock Bowers (S) (TE1 | $53 | 1.06), Mason Taylor (TE35 | $0 | 15.06)

There is no polite way to say this: tswiz is projected 10th in the Angry Birds Space division and sits at just the 23rd percentile of the field, and the roster does not offer an obvious escape hatch. The foundation is genuinely there at the top, Brock Bowers at TE1 and Saquon Barkley at RB8 are the kind of anchors most managers would kill for, but the supporting cast thins out fast. Jalen Hurts grades out as a QB9, which sounds fine until you remember that the offseason trade of A.J. Brown to New England puts Hurts' passing under a microscope it has never really faced before, and a struggling Eagles offense would cut into the rushing touchdown volume that made him a fantasy staple for five straight top-10 finishes. If Hurts slips, the path gets steeper. The draft offered no real upside swings, sixteen chalk picks and zero steals, meaning tswiz bought what the market priced and nothing more. When your ceiling player carries real regression risk and your draft delivered no surprises, weary is the only reasonable posture.

Kipers Best Available drafted with patience and discipline, and the scoreboard does not care. Christian McCaffrey fell to 2.01 while his ADP sat at 1.09, and Parker Washington slipped nearly a round and a half past his number at 9.12. Those are real wins at the draft table, the kind a process-oriented manager is supposed to celebrate. But wins at the draft table do not automatically translate to wins in the standings, and this roster is projected ninth in the Angry Birds Space division and in just the 28th percentile of the field. The top end is legitimate, McCaffrey at RB3 and CeeDee Lamb at WR5 giving the team a genuine foundation, but the middle of the lineup thins quickly. Washington is the cautionary tale here: a player who led Jacksonville in targets last year despite being behind Brian Thomas Jr. on most people's depth charts, now being asked to hold that role against both Thomas and Travis Hunter while the franchise quietly wonders if it even wants him there. That is a lot of uncertainty to anchor a projected starter. The math added up on draft day. The roster still does not.

DevilDogDoug66 sits eighth in the Angry Birds Space division and at just the 31st percentile of the field, and the roster explains exactly why. The foundation is real enough: James Cook projects as RB5, Chase Brown as RB11, and Sam LaPorta checks in at TE8, so there are genuine contributors at the top of the lineup. The problem is what surrounds them. Drake Maye grades as a QB2 but the asterisk next to his name feels like cruel irony given that Daniel Jones (QB25) and Kirk Cousins (QB35) are also on this roster, evidence of a draft that spent resources propping up a position that was already handled. Speaking of draft decisions, Romeo Doubs was taken a full two rounds ahead of his ADP and projects as WR53, while the weakest projected starter in the lineup is Wan'Dale Robinson at WR47, a player who actually fell to this team at a discount. The lever that was free got pulled, and the lever that cost something produced Doubs. When the margin for error is already this thin, those are exactly the mistakes that bury a season before September.

TE: Colston Loveland (S) (TE3 | $37 | 2.08), Hunter Henry (S) (TE18 | $4 | 10.08), Gunnar Helm (TE26 | $2 | 13.05)

Kp3728 sits seventh in the Angry Birds Space division and in the 32nd percentile of the field, and the draft record offers little reason for optimism. The manager landed just two values all draft and committed three major reaches, including pulling Sean Tucker at RB65 a full five rounds ahead of his ADP and burning a third-round pick on Jameson Williams at WR21 when the market had him squarely in round five. Tucker and Williams aren't bad players, but overpaying for them compressed the rest of the roster into a parade of middling pass-catchers ranked WR55 and beyond. The one genuine anchor is Jahmyr Gibbs at RB1, a legitimate stud, but a single elite player surrounded by a roster that grades this thin is less a foundation than a life raft. Colston Loveland at TE3 is a real asset, yet the projected lineup still leans on Hunter Henry as a starter, and Henry grades out as TE18. When your weakest projected starter is the eighteenth-best option at his position, the math is hard to make work.

TE: Dalton Kincaid (S) (TE11 | $10 | 8.10) ♦, Eli Stowers (TE32 | $1 | 14.10), Eli Raridon (TE- | $0 | 18.10)

tricky8181 didn't win the draft with one flashy pick, they won it by accumulating small advantages across 15 rounds. The clearest example is Chris Olave, a projected WR11 who fell a full round past his ADP and landed at 4.10 like nobody noticed. That kind of patience is repeatable, and tricky8181 repeated it again late, grabbing Khalil Shakir at WR51 more than a round after he should have been gone. Stack those quiet wins on top of a legitimate QB1 in Josh Allen paired with a projected TE11 in Dalton Kincaid, and the foundation here is genuinely sturdy. Ashton Jeanty at RB7 and Omarion Hampton at RB9 give this roster the kind of backfield depth that keeps managers comfortable week to week. The 2025 campaign, a 36 percent win rate that landed in the 32nd percentile, suggests there is ground to make up, but the 2026 roster looks like a meaningful step forward. Sitting sixth in the Angry Birds Space division at the 55th percentile overall, tricky8181 has quietly built something worth watching.

TE: Trey McBride (S) (TE2 | $53 | 1.08), Tyler Warren (S) (TE4 | $31 | 3.08), Kenyon Sadiq (TE21 | $3 | 11.08)

Fantasy 6 Pack didn't win the draft with one flashy pick, it won by accumulating small edges across almost every round. The clearest example is David Montgomery, projected at RB23, who fell more than two full rounds past his average draft position before @Tomlin3 scooped him up at 10.05. That kind of patient opportunism compounds quickly, and it shows up in the construction of a starting group that features A.J. Brown at WR8, Malik Nabers at WR12, Trey McBride at TE2, and Tyler Warren at TE4, a combination at receiver and tight end that most teams in this field simply cannot match. Javonte Williams at RB17 adds another projected starter who arrived at a discount. The honest concern is quarterback, where Tyler Shough and Sam Darnold project at QB20 and QB21 respectively, and neither inspires confidence. But in a positionless format, elite production elsewhere can carry a weak QB group further than it might seem. A 58 percent win rate and a 78th percentile scoring finish in 2025 suggest this manager knows how to translate draft value into actual points, and this roster gives them plenty to work with.

PapaSmurf88 didn't make any single move that will end up in a highlight reel, but draft by draft, pick by pick, this roster quietly got built into something that can go the distance in the Angry Birds Space division. The foundation is a receiver group that holds four projected starters ranked WR34 or better, led by Jaxon Smith-Njigba at WR3 and flanked by Rashee Rice at WR13 and Zay Flowers at WR16. Pairing Lamar Jackson with Flowers as a stack gives this team a correlation lever most managers in this field don't have. Tucker Kraft at TE5 and Kyle Pitts at TE7 project as genuine difference-makers at a position where most rosters are settling for average. The one steal on the board, Greg Dulcich landing at TE25 more than three rounds after his ADP, added depth without costing a premium. A 67th-percentile projection and fourth in the division feels like a floor, not a ceiling, for a team that simply refused to lose a draft pick.

TE: George Kittle (S) (TE9 | $12 | 7.10), Theo Johnson (TE37 | $0 | 14.03)

JimSannes didn't need a headline move to build one of the better rosters in the Angry Birds Space division. The foundation is legitimately imposing: Jonathan Taylor at RB4, Derrick Henry at RB12, and Breece Hall at RB14 give this team a tier of backfield talent that most managers would mortgage a mid-round pick to approach, and the positionless format means all three can contribute directly to the weekly score. Then consider how JimSannes got there, landing Caleb Williams at QB6 nearly a full round after his ADP, Rome Odunze at WR30 more than a round late, and Chris Godwin at WR38 in the same patient fashion. Three values, fourteen chalk, and the draft board just kept cooperating. The Williams-Odunze stack adds a ceiling piece on top of the already-sturdy floor. The weakest projected starter is J.K. Dobbins, a RB36 coming off a Lisfranc injury who is still the favorite to lead Denver's backfield, which tells you everything about how much slack this roster carries. Third in the division and 76th percentile tournament-wide feels like a floor, not a ceiling.

Dbro1389 didn't win the draft with one flashy swing, and that's exactly the point. This roster was built pick by pick, with five values scattered across the board and zero major reaches, the kind of disciplined draft that holds up across a long season. Puka Nacua projects as WR1, which is an anchor any manager would build around, and pairing him with Matthew Stafford in a stack only amplifies what Nacua figures to do on a weekly basis. Then consider that Josh Jacobs fell a full round past his ADP and landed as a projected RB16 starter, or that Marvin Harrison Jr. slipped to pick 8.12 despite projecting at WR33, and you start to see the pattern: Dbro1389 consistently got more than the market said it was paying for. The 2025 campaign backed the approach, a 72 percent win rate and an 86th percentile scoring season that landed second in the Angry Birds Space division. The 2026 roster suggests the formula hasn't changed, just gotten a little sharper.

After going 4-32 and scraping the 11th percentile in scoring in 2025, Mike Honcho enters 2026 looking like a completely different operation, landing in the 94th percentile of the field and sitting atop the Angry Birds Space division. The engine of this rebound is a receiving corps that reads like a fantasy manager's wish list: Nico Collins (WR9), Tee Higgins (WR19), Ladd McConkey (WR20), and Davante Adams (WR25) are all projected starters, giving this roster a ceiling most managers would envy. Anchoring everything is Joe Burrow (QB4), snagged three rounds past his ADP, a genuine value given that when healthy he is arguably the best dropback quarterback in fantasy. The caveat writes itself, of course, because Burrow's career has been a series of significant injuries, including a torn wrist ligament and a grade-3 turf toe that cost him most of 2025. But the Burrow-Higgins stack adds a bonus layer of upside, and Harold Fannin (TE6), himself a value pick, rounds out a roster built for a serious bounce-back.
