There is no spin available for erichelair's 2026 situation, and frankly the energy required to find one isn't there. The draft tells the whole story: four major reaches, two minor reaches, and zero steals across the board. The most damning subplot is the quarterback fixation. Jayden Daniels went in the second round, a full 0.7 rounds before his ADP. Then Jaxson Dart followed in the third, 1.8 rounds early, which would be alarming enough on its own without the context that Dart spent chunks of last season jogging to the medical tent for concussion evaluations and crossed 250 passing yards exactly once in 12 starts. Then Malik Willis at QB24 in the seventh, 3.1 rounds early. Then Shedeur Sanders at QB32 in the thirteenth, 3.7 rounds early. Each pick came at a cost that bled the rest of the roster dry, and the wide receiver group absorbed most of the damage, with Christian Watson checking in at WR28 as the top option. The team sits third in the division and in the third percentile of the field. The draft was the diagnosis, and the standings are just the chart.

There is a version of neil5young's 2026 season where CeeDee Lamb goes nuclear, Drake London stays healthy, and the whole thing looks respectable from a distance. The problem is that distance is doing a lot of work. This roster sits 11th in the Battletoads division and in the 17th percentile of the field, and the draft offers little reason to believe the manager found hidden value to close that gap: no steals, two major reaches, and a pile of chalk. The reaches that sting most are Bo Nix, taken more than two rounds before his ADP at QB15, and Tyquan Thornton at WR97, neither of whom projects to start. Meanwhile, the projected lineup leans on Kenneth Gainwell as its weakest starter, and Gainwell grades out at RB34. Lamb and London are real, and Tucker Kraft at TE5 arriving as the lone genuine value pick is a small comfort. But a roster this reliant on everything breaking right, with almost no draft-day leverage built in, is less a team than a prayer with a schedule attached.

dynastysanta walked into the Scott Fish Bowl draft, reached early and often, and emerged with a roster that lands in the 18th percentile of the field. The damage is documented in cold numbers: four major reaches, zero steals, zero values, thirteen picks at chalk. The most telling crime is Justin Herbert at QB8, taken nearly a full round ahead of his market price in round two, at a spot where the board almost certainly held something more useful. Then, as if to double down on the philosophy, Bryce Young at QB26 got scooped 2.5 rounds early in round nine, a pick that borders on inexplicable given Young's projection. The floor of this roster is not the worst in the Battletoads division, Bijan Robinson at RB2 is a genuinely elite asset, but dynastysanta spent so many bullets reaching for players like Chris Rodriguez and Dontayvion Wicks that the surrounding cast feels like it was assembled in a panic. Last year's 75th-percentile scoring performance makes this year's 18th-percentile projection land even harder.

TE: Max Klare (TE- | $0 | 20.03)

There is no particularly elegant way to say this: fantasyreceipts is a bottom-third team in the Battletoads division, sitting at the 21st percentile tournament-wide, and the path to relevance is genuinely hard to trace. The roster's best asset is a deep backfield headlined by Jonathan Taylor (RB4) and Omarion Hampton (RB9), but the receiving corps is a problem that optimism cannot paper over, with Davante Adams (WR25) as the projected top pass-catcher and almost nothing of consequence behind him. The quarterback room compounds the anxiety: Lamar Jackson (QB3) is legitimately elite, but C.J. Stroud (QB22) is the fallback, and Stroud has been trending the wrong direction since his explosive debut season, still waiting to recapture whatever made him dangerous before the injuries and the shakiness set in. Not a single steal or value emerged from the draft, just 14 chalk picks and five minor reaches, which means this roster is almost exactly what it looks like on paper. Hoping for the best is a strategy, technically.

Chaotic Catch enters the 2026 Scott Fish Bowl sitting at the 30th percentile of the field and eighth in the Battletoads division, and the draft decisions that got them here offer little comfort. The RB group is the one genuine bright spot, with James Cook (RB5), Kenneth Walker III (RB10), and Jeremiyah Love (RB13) forming a legitimate core, and Love himself was the lone real bargain of the draft, sliding more than a round past his ADP. That is essentially where the good news ends. The QB room grades out weak across the board, and rather than accepting that reality and moving on, the manager spent late-round capital chasing depth there, reaching 4.3 rounds early on Kirk Cousins (QB35), 3.6 rounds early on Ty Simpson (QB36), and a staggering 6.1 rounds early on Carson Beck (QB40). Those picks represent resources that could have shored up the WR or TE groups instead. When your one identifiable lever is a strong RB corps but your draft log shows four major reaches concentrated elsewhere, you are not building toward a ceiling, you are mortgaging it.

Ghostfacekicker is the kind of team that wins exactly as many games as it deserves and loses sleep over every single one of them. The ceiling is real: Ja'Marr Chase at WR2 is a weekly cornerstone, Caleb Williams projects as QB6, and the supporting cast of Zay Flowers (WR16) and Jaylen Waddle (WR23) gives this roster genuine top-end punch. But the Battletoads division sits at 53rd percentile in the tournament, and at 7th in the division, Ghostfacekicker is the team living on the knife's edge where Chase's good weeks cover for everything and his quiet weeks expose it. The draft was largely chalk, twelve picks following the herd, which means the roster is roughly what it looks like, no hidden upside baked in. The values on TreVeyon Henderson and Alec Pierce could matter enormously down the stretch, but the weakest projected starter is Quentin Johnston at WR41, and in a positionless format, that is the margin. Not a disaster, not a floor. Just the one inch between contention and a first-round exit.

Philmur isn't sitting on one flashy centerpiece and hoping for the best. This is a roster built on a series of quiet advantages that compound. Puka Nacua lands at WR1 despite slipping to the fifth pick of the first round, and Nico Collins projects as WR9 alongside him, giving philmur a receiver corps that would be the envy of most contenders in the Battletoads division. Colston Loveland at TE3 and Sam LaPorta at TE8 add another layer of consistent upside. The Matthew Stafford and Nacua stack is a bonus that came essentially for free given how the draft unfolded. The one genuine question mark is Brock Purdy, a projected starter who carries real uncertainty after a turf toe cost him eight weeks and with his supporting cast in San Francisco looking shakier than ever heading into 2026. But philmur built enough cushion that a single question mark at quarterback reads less like a crisis and more like an accepted trade-off on a roster that otherwise consistently came out ahead. Sixty-third percentile is the floor, not the ceiling.

Detgadget did not make headlines on draft day, and that is exactly the point. The roster sitting in fifth place in the Battletoads division and at the 73rd percentile of the field was assembled the quiet way: pick good players, do not panic, repeat. The receiver group is where that discipline shows up most clearly, with A.J. Brown (WR8), George Pickens (WR10), Tetairoa McMillan (WR15), and Tee Higgins (WR19) all projecting as starters, a collection built almost entirely at or near market price. McMillan is the one name worth flagging on the draft sheet, sliding eight picks past his ADP and landing in Detgadget's lap at 4.12, the kind of quiet transaction that does not get replayed on highlight shows but shows up in standings. Josh Allen (QB1) anchors everything, and his connection to D.J. Moore (WR26) gives the manager a live stack to press when the matchup calls for it. No single swing defined this draft. It just kept coming out ahead.

Like a Wrecking Toad didn't win the draft with one flashy pick. They won it by quietly coming out ahead on trade after trade. Six value picks dot this roster, and the receiver group is where that discipline paid off most visibly: Carnell Tate, Mike Evans, and Khalil Shakir all fell roughly one to two rounds past their ADPs, landing in spots where the manager was effectively getting WR29, WR27, and WR51 at a discount. Stack that on top of projected starters Justin Jefferson (WR6), Malik Nabers (WR12), and Rashee Rice (WR13), and the top of this lineup is legitimately elite. Joe Burrow at QB4 and Harold Fannin at TE6 only reinforce the point. The one blemish is J.J. McCarthy, reached on by more than three rounds, but late-round quarterback swings rarely sink teams in positionless formats. At 79th percentile in the field and fourth in the Battletoads division, Like a Wrecking Toad is exactly the kind of quietly built team that makes deep runs nobody sees coming.

Last year SwinganaMystery finished in the 15th percentile with fewer than 4,000 points scored, a genuinely rough stretch in a tournament that punishes mediocrity without mercy. The 2026 roster looks like a different operation entirely. Jaxon Smith-Njigba projects as WR3 and Chris Olave as WR11, two legitimate difference-makers who give this team a ceiling last year's squad simply never had, and Olave arriving two rounds past his ADP means the manager got him at a discount on top of it. De'Von Achane at RB6 and Bucky Irving at RB21 anchor the backfield, with Irving also falling more than a round past his ADP, so the draft was quietly efficient even if it was mostly chalk. The one honest question mark is Baker Mayfield, who slipped to QB18 in 2025 after a top-five finish the year prior and now faces a supporting cast still looking for answers after Mike Evans' departure. But with Smith-Njigba, Olave, Achane, and Irving all projected as starters, there is enough talent here to push well past last year's floor. The 83rd percentile projection says the rebound is already baked in.

4th and Pimple didn't build this roster with one flashy move. They built it by consistently finding players a round or two later than they should have been available, and the cumulative effect lands them in the 91st percentile of the field. The headliner is Trey McBride, a TE2 plucked at 2.06 when his ADP sat nearly a full round earlier, and he anchors a tight end group that also includes Brock Bowers at TE1, George Kittle at TE9, and Travis Kelce at TE10, all projected starters. That's not luck, that's a manager who kept identifying value and kept acting on it. Patrick Mahomes comes in as QB12 and stacks with Kelce, a pairing that prints points in the same direction. DK Metcalf projects as the weakest starter at WR36, and Deshaun Watson was a notable reach late, but neither concern threatens a roster this well-constructed elsewhere. Division rank of second, 91st percentile overall, and a draft that read like a quiet masterclass, 4th and Pimple belongs in the conversation.

GridironScholar did not win the Scott Fish Bowl draft in a single moment. They won it across eighteen rounds, grinding out an advantage the way a good offensive line does, play after play, until the scoreboard just reflects what was inevitable. Jahmyr Gibbs at RB1 anchors the whole operation, and Ashton Jeanty at RB7 gives this roster a depth of upside that most managers spend their entire draft chasing and never find. Then there is Courtland Sutton, a WR37 projection taken at pick 11.04 when his average draft position sat nearly two and a half rounds earlier, which is the kind of quiet theft that separates competent drafters from genuinely good ones. Drake Maye at QB2 fell slightly past his ADP as well, so even the secondary decisions compounded. The one genuine question mark is Dalton Kincaid, a TE11 projection whose lingering knee issue has Bills GM Brandon Beane hedging his answers publicly. If Kincaid contributes, this roster looks like a division winner. If he does not, the rest of the depth absorbs it. Division rank first. Tournament 93rd percentile. GridironScholar drafted their way here.
