There is a particular kind of exhaustion that comes not from one bad decision but from the slow accumulation of them, and Tweedie22 knows it well. Last season ended at the 35th percentile with a 10-26 record, and the 2026 roster does not project as a dramatic course correction, sitting 12th in the Mishkin division and in just the 8th percentile tournament-wide. The draft did not help matters: six minor reaches and a major one, most notably taking Brock Purdy at 4.01 against an ADP of 5.09, a QB13 projection that barely justifies the cost even if everything breaks right. The foundation has real pieces, Amon-Ra St. Brown at WR4 and James Cook at RB5 anchoring a lineup that can compete on a given week, and the Purdy/George Kittle stack at least offers some ceiling. But when your weakest projected starter is Jordan Addison at WR43, and the draft produced zero steals to offset the overpays, you are not a team with a lever left to pull. You are a team hoping the floor holds.

NickCrampton sits 11th in the Mishkin division and in the bottom tenth of the field, and the draft log explains exactly how it happened. Four major reaches across 19 rounds is a special kind of self-harm, but none of them sting quite like Dontayvion Wicks, taken at 16.04 despite an ADP of 21.09, making Wicks the projected WR96 that NickCrampton apparently could not wait to acquire. Caleb Williams, reached 1.2 rounds early at 2.04, compounds the problem: Williams projects as QB6, which means NickCrampton used a second-round pick on a quarterback who is not even the better quarterback on this roster, since Drake Maye projects as QB2 and was already in hand from pick 1.09. The Maye and A.J. Brown stack is real value, and Brown as a projected WR8 is the one piece of genuine quality here, but Brown cannot carry a roster that spent late-round capital on Wicks and Sean Tucker when both were available significantly later. There is no charitable read. NickCrampton drafted with urgency on every pick that did not warrant it and patience on almost none that did.

TE: Trey McBride (S) (TE2 | $53 | 2.02), AJ Barner (TE24 | $2 | 13.11), Theo Johnson (TE37 | $0 | 15.11)

There is no gentle way to frame a 22nd-percentile projection and a tenth-place division ranking, so let's not try. J.Love's season hinges almost entirely on Jonathan Taylor and Trey McBride, a QB1-tier back and a TE2, carrying a roster that grades out near the bottom of the field. The draft made things worse before it made them better: Bo Nix cost a pick two rounds ahead of his QB15 projection, and Emmett Johnson was claimed more than three rounds early on his way to a projected RB54. Those reaches didn't build depth, they consumed capital that could have addressed a starter-level ceiling that tops out around Garrett Wilson at WR17 and Jeremiyah Love at RB13. C.J. Stroud fell two full rounds past his ADP and represents the clearest win on the board, but a QB22 projection is a floor-raiser, not a difference-maker. The pieces are in place to be competitive on a given week, but the margin for error is essentially gone, and the tournament doesn't hand out points for good intentions.

TE: Dalton Schultz (S) (TE22 | $3 | 11.04), David Njoku (TE29 | $1 | 15.04), Mike Gesicki (TE33 | $0 | 18.09)

There is a version of jdwalsh's 2026 season where everything breaks right, and it runs through Ja'Marr Chase. A WR2 projection is genuine star power, and Chris Olave at WR11 and Jaylen Waddle at WR23 give this roster a legitimate upper tier. The problem is that the draft decisions underneath that group have left jdwalsh with very little margin. Rhamondre Stevenson, Jordan Mason, and James Conner were all taken well ahead of their ADPs, and the three are projecting out at RB31, RB41, and RB56 respectively. That is a lot of draft capital spent chasing a position group that landed in the middle of the pack at best. Sitting 9th in the Mishkin division and at the 30th tournament percentile, jdwalsh is not in a rebuild, just in a situation where the roster ceiling is limited and the path to overcoming it is genuinely unclear. Chase can carry a week. He cannot carry a season from here by himself.

dannykgb enters 2026 sitting eighth in the Mishkin division and hovering right around the tournament median, which is a polite way of saying there is no margin for error anywhere on this roster. The draft tells a familiar story: ten chalk picks, two major reaches, and zero steals. The most egregious of those reaches was Jalen Hurts at 2.11, a full round ahead of his ADP, which is a steep price for a QB9 in a format where quarterbacks score like everyone else. That kind of aggressive spending on a middling return sets the tone. The receiver group is the one genuine bright spot, with Malik Nabers, Tee Higgins, and Ladd McConkey all projected as starters and grading out at WR12, WR19, and WR20 respectively, but the rest of the roster offers little cushion. Bijan Robinson at RB2 is excellent, and Travis Kelce was the lone real value in the draft, but Hunter Henry at TE18 profiles as the weakest projected starter, and a 44-percent win rate last season suggests this team was already playing close to its ceiling.

SlappersOnly11 sits at the 48th percentile and seventh in the Mishkin division, which is basically the fantasy equivalent of a 500 record in August: not dangerous, not dismissible, entirely dependent on which version of itself shows up. The case for optimism starts with Puka Nacua, the WR1 projection, anchoring a receiver corps that also includes Emeka Egbuka at WR18, Rome Odunze at WR30, and Chris Godwin at WR38 as projected starters. That is a legitimate top end. The case for skepticism starts at quarterback, where Justin Herbert lands at QB8 but cost a second-round pick, making him the team's most consequential draft decision and its most debatable one, taken nearly a full round ahead of his ADP. Saquon Barkley at RB8 adds another credible piece, but the depth behind him falls off sharply. This roster will not beat itself, but it will not overwhelm anyone either. The margins, matchups, and a few fortunate injury reports will likely decide whether this team finishes in the money or just outside it.

TE: Jake Ferguson (S) (TE12 | $8 | 8.10), Pat Freiermuth (TE30 | $1 | 13.03)

gary738 sits at the 49th percentile like a man perfectly centered in a revolving door, moving neither in nor out. The roster is genuinely good in places: Jahmyr Gibbs projects as RB1, Ashton Jeanty sits at RB7, and Omarion Hampton checks in at RB9, giving this team a legitimate top of the depth chart. But the field is not scared, because the margins around those stars are thin. The draft was all chalk, no steals, which means gary738 paid full price for every piece and has no hidden upside baked in. Matthew Golden, projected at WR52 and penciled in as a starter, is where the season could quietly unravel. Expectations followed Golden into Green Bay, the results have not matched them, and with time already compressing on his window to matter, WR52 is a fragile plank in a floor that needs to hold. Gibbs and Jeanty can carry a week. They cannot carry a season if Golden keeps underdelivering every time the margins close.

TE: Mason Taylor (TE35 | $0 | 17.10)

nantonio88 didn't swing for the fences and miss, didn't outsmart themselves chasing upside, just drafted steadily and walked away with a genuinely strong roster. The foundation is legitimate: Christian McCaffrey at RB3 and Justin Jefferson at WR6 are the kind of projected starters who make a team viable on their own, and George Pickens at WR10 arrived as a value, falling nearly a full round past his ADP. That pattern of patient accumulation shows up again with Omar Cooper Jr., who slid 1.8 rounds before nantonio88 scooped him at WR60. The one blemish is Keenan Allen, reached 4.6 rounds ahead of his ADP and projecting all the way down at WR99, a late-round luxury that probably cost a better option. Still, with four values on the board and projected starters at every level, this team finished 2025 at the 59th percentile in scoring and looks positioned to climb. At 60th percentile in the current tournament projections and fifth in the Mishkin division, the floor here is respectable and the ceiling is a genuine playoff push.

thestreetfa didn't win the draft with one flashy pick. They won it by not losing it. Josh Allen at QB1 anchors the whole operation, and pairing him with Joe Burrow at QB4 means the team is never scrambling at the position that breaks seasons. The real signature of this draft, though, is the back half: six values pulled across the roster, zero reaches of any kind. Oronde Gadsden fell more than a round past his ADP and lands as a projected starter at TE16. Juwan Johnson came off the board 2.3 rounds late. Terrance Ferguson slipped 2.2 rounds. None of those picks made headlines in the moment, but that kind of quiet, compounding efficiency is exactly how a team climbs from 53rd-percentile scoring into something more dangerous. The floor here is a 65th-percentile tournament projection with a projected starting group that includes Chase Brown at RB11 and Travis Etienne at RB18. That is not a team hoping to get lucky. That is a team that drafted well enough to make its own luck.

Prime Targets didn't need a lottery ticket to build something worth talking about. This roster was constructed the way good drafts actually get done: quietly, efficiently, and consistently ahead of the market. Tetairoa McMillan, Harold Fannin, and Michael Pittman all fell past their ADPs by more than a round, and the manager was there to collect each time, landing a WR15, a TE6, and a WR44 for less than they cost everyone else. The receiver group is the engine here, with Jaxon Smith-Njigba (WR3), Drake London (WR7), and Nico Collins (WR9) forming a projected-starter core that most managers in this field would dismantle their entire rosters to assemble. Twelve chalk picks against zero major reaches tells you something too: this is a team built on discipline, not desperation. The 2025 version of this roster finished in the 98th percentile in scoring, and while past seasons don't guarantee anything, the approach that produced that result is clearly still very much intact. Third in the Mishkin division feels like a floor, not a ceiling.

There are clean drafts, and then there is what adamparalta put together in the Mishkin division. Sitting second in the division and in the 89th percentile of the field, this roster was built with the kind of quiet precision that does not announce itself until you look at the board and realize almost nothing was overpaid for. Kyle Pitts fell a full two rounds past his ADP and landed at TE7, Tucker Kraft came two rounds late at TE5, and both of them join Colston Loveland at TE3 in what is simply a murderers' row of tight end production. Kraft's pre-injury trajectory with the Packers, combined with an offseason that saw more receivers leave Green Bay than arrive, sets him up to reclaim the featured role that briefly made him a fantasy star. Lamar Jackson at QB3 anchors the whole operation, stacking with Zay Flowers to ensure upside is never more than one big game away. Five values, one steal, zero major reaches. That is not luck, that is a manager who knew exactly where the market was wrong and exploited it every time.

richgeorge didn't win the draft with one flashy pick. He won it by consistently coming out ahead on value, round after round. CeeDee Lamb at WR5 landed in the second round despite an ADP that had him going in the first. Sam LaPorta at TE8 slipped a round and a half. Jordyn Tyson and Michael Wilson both fell past their ADPs in the middle rounds, adding projected starters to a wide receiver group that already included Jameson Williams at WR21, Terry McLaurin at WR24, and Brian Thomas Jr. at WR31. Anchor that corps with Brock Bowers at TE1 and a Dak Prescott and Lamb stack, and you have a starting lineup that earns its division-leading rank through depth of quality rather than a single marquee swing. Coming off a 41st-percentile scoring season in 2025, richgeorge clearly identified what needed fixing and fixed it methodically. The 91st-percentile projection is not an accident. It is the arithmetic result of a draft that kept finding the better side of the deal.
