There is no kind framing for what Rad_Thad1 built in this draft, and the numbers do not try to offer one. The team sits 12th in the division and in the 11th percentile of the field, and the draft board explains why: five major reaches against zero steals, a ledger that reads less like a strategy and more like a series of panicked overcorrections. The most damaging of those overcorrections was Matthew Stafford, a QB14 taken in the second round when the market said sixth. That is not a calculated gamble on upside, that is a premium pick price on a quarterback who projects as a mid-tier starter, and it warped the rest of the board before the team found any footing. George Kittle cost a similar toll, taken two-plus rounds early at TE9. Puka Nacua is a genuine WR1 and Breece Hall and Kyren Williams are legitimate building blocks, but the foundation underneath them was bought at inflated prices, and when you overpay everywhere, the math eventually stops working in your favor. It stopped working here.

There is a specific kind of fantasy football misery that comes not from having nothing but from having the wrong things, and cjb1978 is living it in 2026. Bijan Robinson projects as RB2, Colston Loveland checks in at TE3, and the supporting cast around both of them is genuinely impressive on paper, yet the team sits at 12th percentile in the field because the formula only works if the players you start outside that elite core can keep pace, and here they cannot. The wide receiver group tops out at Jayden Higgins at WR54, with Isaac TeSlaa at WR68 and Darnell Mooney at WR82 behind him, and the quarterback situation is Cam Ward at QB23 on his best day. A 44-percent win rate and 19th-percentile scoring in 2025 already told this story once. The draft offered no corrective, producing zero steals and zero values against seven minor reaches and a major reach on Malachi Fields, taken nearly three full rounds before his ADP. Robinson and Loveland are real. The rest of this roster is hoping they are enough, and they will not be.

TE: Dallas Goedert (S) (TE15 | $6 | 9.12)

RevZempoe posted a sparkling 78-percent win rate in 2025 and somehow arrived at 2026 looking like a team that spent the offseason trading the silverware for bus fare. The roster sits at just the 24th percentile in the tournament and tenth in the division, and the draft did not do much to close the gap, producing zero steals and a pair of major reaches, most painfully Cooper Kupp at WR88 taken nearly four rounds ahead of where the market valued him. Justin Jefferson is the one genuine lifeline here, a WR6 projection that carries real credibility now that Kyler Murray has displaced the quarterback who made Jefferson nearly unfantasyable in 2025, but Lamar Jackson at QB3 is already doing the heavy lifting and Jefferson cannot carry this roster alone. The supporting cast thins out quickly, with Jakobi Meyers projected as the WR45 and functioning as the weakest projected starter on a team that desperately needed its draft capital to overproduce rather than underperform. There is no obvious move left to make, and the standings are unlikely to be kind.

drewplumlee sits ninth in The Last of Us division and in the 33rd percentile of the field, and the roster map explains both numbers without much mystery. The receiver group is legitimately strong, with Drake London, Tetairoa McMillan, Jameson Williams, Christian Watson, Brian Thomas Jr., and Marvin Harrison Jr. all projecting as starters, and that collection alone would be the envy of most managers in this tournament. The problem is that everything surrounding those receivers is holding a mediocre sign. Sam Darnold grades out as QB21 and Tua Tagovailoa as QB31, meaning drewplumlee essentially reached 2.5 rounds early in round 12 on a quarterback who ranks below Darnold anyway. Christian McCaffrey anchors the backfield at RB3, but the depth behind him falls off a cliff fast, with Zach Charbonnet, Woody Marks, and Brian Robinson all clustered in the RB42-to-RB45 range. The receiver talent is real, but talent at one position cannot paper over a roster that is leaking from every other direction, and there is no obvious trade chip or waiver miracle lurking here to change that story.

Bill drafted like a man who read every cheat sheet twice and circled the right names. David Njoku fell nearly three rounds past his ADP and Bill was there. Malik Washington slid two full rounds and Bill pounced. Four values on a roster of this size is a genuinely tidy draft, and not a single major reach to apologize for. The cruelty is that none of it compounded into a contender. Brock Bowers projects as TE1 and Nico Collins sits at WR9, but the roster lands at 38th percentile in the field and eighth in the division, which means the good picks just canceled out the mediocre ones rather than building past them. Jeremiyah Love at RB13 and Malik Nabers at WR12 give Bill a real foundation, yet the projected weakest starter is Michael Wilson at WR39, and the math simply does not clear. Bill did the homework, got the grades, and still did not make the team. That is not a process failure. That is just how it goes sometimes.

Something To Fight For sits 7th in The Last of Us division and projects in the 42nd percentile of the field, which is exactly the kind of math that keeps a manager up at night. The quarterback group is genuinely strong, Drake Maye at QB2 and Jayden Daniels at QB5 giving this roster a ceiling most teams would envy, and the Maye/A.J. Brown stack adds a bonus layer of upside. The problem is that the rest of the roster grades out as average at best, and the path to punching above that 42nd-percentile projection requires nearly everything to break right simultaneously. The draft did not manufacture much runway: 13 chalk picks, four minor reaches, and a major reach on Brandon Aiyuk at WR81 suggest a manager who spent the back half of the draft chasing names rather than value. When your weakest projected starter is Rhamondre Stevenson at RB31, you are not bad enough to rebuild and not good enough to contend, just stuck in that airless middle ground where hope costs you nothing and wins cost you everything.

TE: Travis Kelce (S) (TE10 | $11 | 6.10), Juwan Johnson \(S\) (TE20 | $4 | 13.03)

CedricDiggory's 2026 roster didn't get built on one splashy pick, it got built on a draft that kept winning small battles. Jahmyr Gibbs at RB1 anchors everything, and the supporting cast around him reflects a manager who understood value before the board did. James Cook arrived at RB5 despite sliding half a round past his ADP, and Jordan Love came in at QB17 after drifting a full round later than expected. Neither of those is a lottery ticket, both are players who project as genuine contributors, collected at a discount. The draft chart backs the story: one outright steal, three good values, and only four minor reaches against zero major ones. Jared Goff, the most notable reach at a round early, is the kind of quiet weekly producer who has finished as a top-10 quarterback four straight years in six-point passing leagues, even if his ceiling stays bounded. George Pickens at WR10 and Garrett Wilson at WR17 give the lineup real teeth at the top. A 59th-percentile tournament projection and a 69-percent win rate last season say this team belongs in the conversation.

FantasySportsBrain didn't win the draft with one flashy pick. They won it by showing up to work every round. The foundation is legitimate: Josh Allen at QB1 and De'Von Achane at RB6 and Saquon Barkley at RB8 give this roster a top-end floor that most teams in the field would envy. But the real story is how the middle of the draft held up. Chase Brown landed at RB11 despite falling more than a full round past his ADP, a quiet windfall that tightened an already strong group. Denzel Boston and Antonio Williams arrived even later than Brown relative to their ADPs, giving the roster late-round upside without requiring any gambling in the early rounds. Fifteen chalk picks and zero major reaches tell you this manager wasn't chasing, just executing. The 2025 squad went 20-16 and finished near the tournament median in scoring, a reasonable baseline. The 2026 version looks like a step forward, sitting 67th percentile in the field with starters projected to carry their weight. Nothing here screams upset special. It just quietly looks like a team built to win.

There are flashy drafts and there are effective ones, and claydorami quietly built the latter. The foundation is Jonathan Taylor (RB4) anchoring a backfield corps alongside Bhayshul Tuten (RB25) and David Montgomery (RB23), but the real story is how consistently the draft came out ahead on value throughout the middle and late rounds. Trey McBride (TE2) arrived at pick 2.02 when his ADP sat nearly half a round earlier, Emeka Egbuka (WR18) slipped a full round past where he was supposed to go, and Jalen Nailor (WR61) and Travis Hunter (WR62) both fell nearly two rounds into claydorami's lap in the back half of the draft. Six values, zero steals, and only one meaningful reach across the entire board: that is a draft built on discipline rather than desperation. The J.K. Dobbins (RB36) reach at pick 9.11 is the lone blemish, but one early swing does not define what is otherwise a portrait of a manager who simply let the board do the work. At 72nd percentile and sitting fourth in The Last of Us, this roster belongs in the conversation.

TarHeelRick didn't swing for the fences and miss. This roster was built pick by pick, and the cumulative effect is a team sitting at 81st percentile with room to argue upward. The centerpiece is the receiver group, where Amon-Ra St. Brown (WR4) and CeeDee Lamb (WR5) give this team a top-end that most managers would trade half their draft for, and Lamb arriving at pick 2.03 against an ADP of 1.11 is the kind of quiet win that separates sharp drafters from lucky ones. DeVonta Smith (WR14) slots in as a starter and also connects to the Jalen Hurts stack, which matters more now that A.J. Brown is gone to New England and everything Philadelphia runs through the air runs through Smith. Hurts is chasing a sixth consecutive top-10 finish under real offensive pressure, and having his primary target already on the roster is drafting with actual foresight. Third in the division feels like a floor, not a ceiling.

Natreyk went into this draft and apparently decided that ADP was more of a suggestion than a rule, logging three major reaches while somehow walking out with a roster sitting in the 85th percentile of the field. The most audacious of those calls was Khalil Shakir, yanked 3.2 rounds ahead of schedule at 8.08, a pick that looked reckless on paper and looks considerably smarter now that he projects as a WR51 worth starting. Then there is Jack Bech, taken 4.3 rounds early, which is either visionary or fortunate, and at this point the distinction hardly matters. What makes the whole thing hold together is that the core is genuinely elite: Joe Burrow at QB4 stacked with Ja'Marr Chase at WR2 gives this roster a ceiling that most managers here would trade their entire draft boards for, and Tyler Warren at TE4 alongside Harold Fannin at TE6 means the position is a weapon, not a question mark. Natreyk reached, reached again, and arrived somewhere most managers would envy. Call it conviction. Call it luck. The standings column in The Last of Us division will probably just call it second place.

Saber19 didn't win the draft with one flashy pick. They won it by consistently coming out ahead, round after round, until the advantages piled up into something undeniable. Jaxon Smith-Njigba at WR3 is the kind of projected ceiling that anchors a contender, and pairing him with Ashton Jeanty, a projected RB7 taken just four spots before his ADP, kept the value intact without chasing anyone. Then the draft handed Saber19 Caleb Williams a full round after he should have been gone, a QB6 projection at a significant discount, and suddenly the Caleb Williams to Luther Burden stack looks less like a strategy and more like a windfall. The numbers back all of it up: 88th percentile in the field, first in The Last of Us division, and a 2025 season that went 21-15 with 4608 points scored. This roster didn't need a heist to get here. It just needed a manager who knew what good looked like and kept taking it.
