The Frog enters 2026 sitting 11th in the Chrono Trigger division and in just the 16th percentile of the field, and the draft board does not offer much reason for optimism. The problem is not a lack of names. Brock Bowers at TE1, Nico Collins at WR9, and Justin Herbert at QB8 give this roster genuine headliners. But Herbert was a major reach, taken 1.2 rounds before his ADP, and the cost of buying up means the depth behind those stars grades out thin. Four minor reaches and two major reaches against zero steals tells the story plainly: The Frog paid premium prices for players already priced at premium, leaving little margin for error when injuries or underperformance arrive. Jordan Addison projects as the weakest projected starter at WR43, and that floor is low enough to sink weeks on its own. Last year's 77th-percentile scoring performance feels like a distant memory now. There is no obvious lever left to pull, no undervalued piece quietly waiting to carry the load. The ceiling exists, but getting there requires nearly everything to go right.

The math is brutal for kkto13 in 2026, and no amount of creative lineup shuffling changes it. The foundation is real: Jaxon Smith-Njigba projects as WR3, Saquon Barkley as RB8, and Jalen Hurts as QB9, a legitimate top-shelf trio that keeps the lights on. But the roster thins out quickly after that, and the draft did almost nothing to fix it. Of the 20 picks tracked against ADP, kkto13 recorded zero steals, one value, and six minor reaches, meaning they consistently paid slightly above market without landing anything that felt like a coup. Travis Hunter came in at WR62 after falling two-plus rounds past his ADP, which is the closest thing to a discovery on this sheet, and projecting as WR62 is not exactly a windfall. The team grades out 12th in the Chrono Trigger division and in the 15th percentile of the field, a forecast that is hard to argue with when your best response to a thin back end is chalk and quiet hope.

TE: Colby Parkinson (TE31 | $1 | 15.05), Jake Tonges (TE34 | $0 | 16.08)

There is no polite way to say this: WettestJesus is sitting at 10th in the Chrono Trigger division and the 18th percentile of the field, and the roster does not offer much reason to argue with either number. The foundation is genuinely good, Christian McCaffrey at RB3 and James Cook at RB5 anchoring a deep backfield that grades out strong, but the problem is everything around it. The QB room tops out at Baker Mayfield at QB18 and Kyler Murray at QB19, a Mayfield-Emeka Egbuka stack that could produce but requires both men to cooperate at the same time, which is its own form of faith. The draft did not help matters, with Jonathon Brooks taken 2.3 rounds early and Emmett Johnson reached a staggering 3.9 rounds before his ADP. Those are not aggressive bets, they are expensive ones, and they consumed capital that might have shored up the weakest projected starter on the board, Rhamondre Stevenson at RB31. McCaffrey is a real asset. The rest of this is a prayer.

TE: George Kittle (S) (TE9 | $12 | 8.05), David Njoku (TE29 | $1 | 13.08)

rp3tz23 is sitting ninth in the Chrono Trigger division and at the 39th percentile of the field, and a closer look at the roster explains exactly why. The quarterback situation captures the dilemma in miniature: Josh Allen is a genuine QB1 asset and anchors a nice stack with D.J. Moore, but the fallback behind him is Joe Burrow, a player whose fantasy ceiling is borderline unmatched and whose floor is basically a hospital bed. Burrow missed most of last season with a grade-3 turf toe injury and has a career pattern of missing not a few games but entire seasons when things go wrong. Leaning on that as your insurance policy is less a safety net and more a tightrope. The wide receiver group grades out weak, with Xavier Worthy projected as the WR49 and starting anyway, and the draft offered almost no surplus value to paper over these cracks, including a Kimani Vidal reach of five-plus rounds. There is no obvious lever left to pull here, just a roster hoping everything holds together.

JasonShebilske ran a disciplined draft, picking up George Pickens three rounds into a slot where the board had already moved past him, landing Jakobi Meyers a round and a half after his ADP, and generally treating every pick like a patient investor waiting for the market to come to him. The problem is that patience in the draft room does not manufacture upside that was never there to begin with. Pickens projects as WR10, which is genuinely good, and Tee Higgins at WR19 and Jameson Williams at WR21 give this team real receiver depth, but the roster plateaus there. The projected tenth starter is Meyers at WR45, a player who is fine in the right context and punishing as a lineup anchor. A 45th percentile finish in scoring last season was not a fluke to overcome, it was a baseline to escape, and nothing here screams escape. JasonShebilske did the homework, got the values, and still lands at eighth in the Chrono Trigger division. Sometimes the process is correct and the outcome is still bleak.

Snokone86 sits at 49th percentile like a person who ordered the middle seat on purpose, and the whole season comes down to whether the margins tip left or right. The foundation is real: Jayden Daniels at QB5 and Jahmyr Gibbs at RB1 give this roster a genuine top end, and Drake London falling to WR7 while sliding past his ADP by half a round is exactly the kind of quiet draft-room luck that separates 56-win teams from 60-win teams. But the draft showed a manager willing to pay forward for certainty, reaching 2.4 rounds early on Gunnar Helm at TE26 when the board likely had better value sitting untouched. Helm is not a bad player, but TE26 is a bench contributor, and burning an 11th-round pick to lock him in early is the kind of decision that feels fine until it doesn't. Garrett Wilson at WR17 and Rome Odunze at WR30 keep the floor elevated, yet Cam Ward projects as the weakest starter on the board. In a field this competitive, one projected QB23 starting every week is a margin that cuts.

scothenry sits at 54th percentile in the field, division rank six, the kind of team that wins the weeks it's supposed to and drops the ones it can't afford to. The floor here is genuinely solid: Bijan Robinson at RB2 and Breece Hall at RB14 give this roster a reliable production base that most managers would trade for, and Kyle Pitts landing at TE7 after falling 1.7 rounds past his ADP is the draft's clearest win. But the margins cut both ways. Caleb Williams was the second pick of the second round with a QB6 projection, a reach of nearly a full round that carries real opportunity cost, and the receiver group thins out fast after Chris Olave at WR11 and Courtland Sutton at WR37. Nothing here is broken, nothing is dominant. This is a team that probably finishes right where it started, somewhere in the middle of the Chrono Trigger division, sweating the close losses and wondering if Williams was worth the premium.

jacobm32 went into this draft swinging early and often, and the ledger shows it: three major reaches, two minor ones, and a grand total of one steal on a board that handed out very few gifts. The thing is, the roster does not look like a cautionary tale. Ashton Jeanty at RB7 was grabbed nearly a full round before consensus said to bother, and that conviction at the top of the board anchored everything that followed. Then the board cooperated just enough: Malik Nabers tumbled more than two rounds past his ADP and landed at 6.01, giving jacobm32 a projected WR12 starter at a price that made the earlier aggressiveness look almost prescient. Pair Nabers with a Dak Prescott and CeeDee Lamb stack that provides real weekly upside, and the foundation here is legitimate. The question hanging over the whole season is whether jacobm32 is a drafter who reads the board differently or one who simply got away with it. Sitting 59th percentile in the field, the answer is probably a little of both.

LightningLeague sits 66th percentile in the field and fourth in the Chrono Trigger division, which sounds modest until you look at how they got there. The draft sheet reads like a cautionary tale: fifteen chalk picks, two major reaches, zero steals. Darnell Mooney taken nearly three and a half rounds early. Elic Ayomanor pulled almost four rounds ahead of schedule. On paper, that is a manager paying premiums on players the rest of the field was happy to leave on the board. But here is the thing, the roster that emerged from those decisions is genuinely good. Puka Nacua landed at WR1 despite falling five spots past his ADP, and the rest of the receiving corps quietly stacked up: Ladd McConkey at WR20, Brian Thomas Jr. at WR31, Chris Godwin at WR38. Tyler Warren at TE4 gives the lineup a weekly edge at his position. Whether those reaches on Mooney and Ayomanor reflect conviction or just draft-day noise, LightningLeague has the top-end talent to make the question irrelevant.

sprice14 didn't win the draft with one thunderbolt pick. They won it the way a good poker player wins a session, by consistently getting more than they paid for. Jonathan Taylor at RB4 and Trey McBride at TE2 give this roster a legitimate top-end foundation, and the supporting cast was assembled with the kind of quiet efficiency that doesn't make highlight reels but does make playoffs. Matthew Stafford fell nearly two full rounds past his ADP before sprice14 scooped him at QB14, and late-round targets like Tyjae Spears and Brian Robinson both slid well beyond their expected range. The one blemish is MarShawn Lloyd, taken nearly six rounds ahead of ADP, a reach that stands out precisely because the rest of the board was so disciplined. Still, sitting at third in the division and the 70th percentile of the field, this is a team built on process, and the process was almost airtight. Derrick Henry, Jeremiyah Love, and Josh Jacobs round out a backfield depth chart that gives sprice14 options no matter how the season unfolds.

JoeHancock06 finished last season at the 94th percentile and walked into the 2026 draft apparently determined to tempt fate. The board says this roster was built on nerve: Christian Kirk landed nearly seven rounds early, Keenan Allen came off the board nearly five rounds ahead of schedule, and nobody handed over Isiah Pacheco without wincing either. The cynical read is recklessness. The honest read is that it worked. Amon-Ra St. Brown at WR4 and Justin Jefferson at WR6 are projected starters who would anchor any contender, Rashee Rice and DeVonta Smith give the lineup genuine depth behind them, and Smith himself now steps into a true alpha role in Philadelphia with A.J. Brown gone and no proven heir apparent to challenge him. Harold Fannin and Sam LaPorta project as TE6 and TE8, both starters, both legitimate. Goff stacks with St. Brown and LaPorta, tightening the floor on a roster that already sits second in the Chrono Trigger division and in the top 15 percent of the field. Call it conviction. Call it luck. The standings column does not much care which one it is.

daveycakes didn't win the draft with one loud pick. They just kept coming out ahead, round after round, until the roster looked like this: Ja'Marr Chase at WR2, A.J. Brown at WR8, Colston Loveland at TE3, and Patrick Mahomes at QB12, all projected starters, all acquired at or near their value. The Mahomes-Travis Kelce stack alone is the kind of foundational piece most managers are chasing at the top of the draft, and daveycakes landed it without overpaying. Then consider Jaylen Waddle, a WR23 projection who quietly upgrades his situation this year, leaving a dysfunctional passing offense behind for Denver, where Bo Nix threw more passes than anyone in the league last season. That is the thread running through this entire roster: not one splashy moment, but a long series of sensible decisions that compounded into a division-leading team sitting in the 89th percentile of the field. The floor here is high, and the ceiling is genuinely worth talking about.
