Cincinnati - Civilization

Rankings are based on actual Scott Fish Bowl ADP from the FantasyLife Scott Fish Bowl tool. Note that in a major tournament like this with over 5,000 teams, there are miniscule degrees of separation at play. One player having a breakout season can drastically change a team's results.

These rankings are intended to be entertaining and add in a small way to a wonderful cause. Please consider donating to Fantasy Cares.

There is being aggressive on the draft board, and then there is whatever LittleE2627 was doing. Five major reaches across the roster, zero steals, and a projected finish dead last in the Civilization division tell the whole story before you even look at the names. The most damning exhibit is the first round: Tee Higgins at WR19 was taken more than three rounds before her ADP, which is the kind of panicked reach that poisons a draft at the root because every pick that follows gets compressed downstream. Then there is the quarterback situation, where Patrick Mahomes at QB12 is paired with Cam Ward at QB23, a weak group by any measure. Harold Fannin at TE6 is a genuine bright spot, a player who outworked his competition in Cleveland last year and whose value ticked up when the Browns cut David Njoku, though he is still tethered to one of the ugliest quarterback rooms in the league. One good tight end cannot bail out a roster built this recklessly. LittleE2627 is a cautionary tale wearing cleats.

Parker45greis sits 11th in the Civilization division and in just the 19th percentile of the field, and the draft log does not offer much hope that things will improve. Three major reaches dot the board, including Joe Burrow taken nearly a full round before his ADP and Mark Andrews pulled in at pick 6.04 when the market said wait until round nine. Those early commitments cost the flexibility that separates recoverable drafts from regrettable ones. The roster does have real pieces: Amon-Ra St. Brown at WR4 and Drake London at WR7 give the lineup a legitimate top end, and both were acquired at a discount past their ADPs. But the depth behind them thins out fast, and the weakest projected starter tells the story. RJ Harvey projects as RB28, and that number may be generous given that Denver brought back JK Dobbins, added Jonah Coleman, and appears committed to a committee that benefits nobody. Parker45greis needed a clean draft to compensate for a thin floor, and the reaches ensured that never happened.

There is a particular kind of draft misery reserved for managers who did everything right and still ended up here. 4inchdickandproud played the value game with genuine discipline, landing 15 chalk picks and only four minor reaches across the entire board, and the reward is a roster sitting 10th in the Civilization division and in the 29th percentile of the field. The pieces that should anchor the team are real: Justin Jefferson at WR6, Trey McBride at TE2, and a supporting cast that includes Tetairoa McMillan, Ladd McConkey, and George Kittle as projected starters. That is a legitimate core. The problem is that the floor under the lineup drops fast, with Jayden Reed, projected WR48, as the weakest projected starter, and a quarterback room headlined by Jordan Love at QB17 and Sam Darnold at QB21. Process without payoff is its own punishment, and after a 2025 season that finished in the 23rd percentile, this roster feels less like a rebuild than a restatement of the same aching equation.

TE: Tucker Kraft (S) (TE5 | $23 | 4.03), Terrance Ferguson (TE28 | $1 | 15.10)

Danfdanf drafted like a patient, disciplined value hunter and still lands at 46th percentile, which is the kind of outcome that makes you question the whole enterprise. Jaxon Smith-Njigba at WR3 fell to the tenth pick of the first round, Bhayshul Tuten at RB25 slid a round and a half before Danfdanf scooped him, Jayden Higgins dropped similarly late into round 13. The values were real. And yet the roster sits ninth in the Civilization division, projected nowhere near the top of the field. The issue is that "falling past ADP" and "being good" are not the same promise, and this roster collected a lot of the former without enough of the latter. Lamar Jackson anchors things at QB3, and Matthew Stafford, coming off a late-career MVP season with a new heir apparent already drafted in Los Angeles, adds real upside as a QB14. The ceiling exists. But when your weakest projected starter is Higgins, and five values still produce a middling roster, the draft philosophy worked and the math just did not cooperate.

Sitting eighth in the Civilization division and hovering around the 47th percentile, pebble1 is a team that looks busy on paper without actually going anywhere. The backfield is legitimately strong, with Bijan Robinson (RB2), James Cook (RB5), and Kyren Williams (RB15) forming a top-heavy group that should contribute every week. But from there, the roster grades out frustratingly average, and the draft choices that were supposed to shore things up instead reveal the problem. Fernando Mendoza (QB27) was taken 4.2 rounds ahead of his ADP, and Tua Tagovailoa (QB31) followed as another early overpay, leaving Jalen Hurts (QB9) as the only quarterback who actually justifies his draft cost. Hurts is fine until you remember that AJ Brown is now in New England, and a Hurts offense operating without its best weapon could see those rushing touchdown opportunities quietly erode. George Pickens (WR10) at WR10 is a genuine asset, but Aaron Jones projecting as the weakest projected starter at RB38 is a ceiling problem dressed up as a depth problem, and there is no obvious move left to fix it.

robmueller34 sits at 52nd percentile and seventh in the division, which is exactly where this roster looks when you study it closely: capable of winning on any given week, unlikely to run the table. The foundation is real. Josh Allen at QB1 and Saquon Barkley at RB8 give this team a ceiling that most managers at this tournament tier cannot match, and Kenneth Walker III at RB10 and Josh Jacobs at RB16 mean the backfield stays productive even when one piece underperforms. The problem is that the margins cut both ways. The wide receiver group projects as a weakness, with Rome Odunze at WR30, Brian Thomas Jr. at WR31, and Marvin Harrison Jr. at WR33 clustered in that frustrating tier where they contribute without dominating, and a Caleb Williams stack with Odunze adds upside without guaranteeing it. After a brutal 2025 that landed robmueller34 in the tenth percentile in scoring, the improvement here is genuine, but genuine improvement and a deep tournament run are two different things. The margins will decide which one this turns out to be.

Stukey's 2026 roster doesn't announce itself with one flashy move. It just keeps winning the small arguments. Christian McCaffrey, a projected RB3, slipped to the 2.01 when his ADP sat at 1.09, and Stukey was there to collect. Omarion Hampton followed, landing at the 4.01 despite an ADP in the third, giving the roster a one-two punch at the top that most managers would envy. Christian Watson at WR28 came nearly a round and a half late, and Adonai Mitchell fell more than two full rounds before Stukey grabbed him in the 18th. That is not one fortunate slide, that is a draft where the board kept cooperating. Malik Nabers projects as a WR12 starter and Jaylen Waddle sits right behind him, so the top of the lineup is legitimately stacked. The Michael Penix Jr. reach in the 14th is the one eyebrow-raiser, but one reach gets swallowed easily when four values are propping up the roster around it. At 58th percentile in the field, Stukey has real room to climb.

The Babylonians are not a team built on depth charts and hope. They are built on correlation, and the stack is the whole strategy. Dak Prescott checks in as QB7, CeeDee Lamb as WR5, and Jake Ferguson as TE12, and those three are connected at the hip in this lineup. When Prescott goes off, the expectation is that Lamb and Ferguson go with him, multiplying the return on a single game script rather than hedging across independent outcomes. Jared Goff and Jameson Williams add a second pairing that reinforces the same logic. Goff has finished as a top-10 quarterback four straight years and Williams slots in as WR21, so that stack carries real weekly floor even if Goff's ceiling stays capped by his lack of mobility. The draft backed it all up with genuine value: Lamb, Etienne, and Ferguson all fell past their ADP. This roster lands at 61st percentile, and fifth in the Civilization Division, but if the stacks hit in the same weeks, the ceiling climbs faster than that ranking suggests.

samiam421 did not build this roster the way the algorithm wanted. Three major reaches, two minor reaches, zero steals, and yet here they sit at the 72nd percentile, holding what is genuinely one of the more dangerous receiving corps in the Civilization division. That is not a coincidence, it is a argument. The foundation is unimpeachable: Brock Bowers at TE1 and A.J. Brown at WR8 give this team a ceiling that most managers would mortgage their middle rounds to acquire, and samiam421 grabbed Bowers half a round early at the top of the draft, which hardly qualifies as reckless. The conviction shows up louder in the late rounds, where Jaylen Wright was taken nearly seven rounds before consensus and Malachi Fields nearly five. Both could be nothing. Both could be everything. Isaiah Likely, now stepping into a light tight end room with John Harbaugh in New York, is the kind of quietly correct call that makes you wonder if samiam421 is just seeing the board differently than everyone else, or if they are simply getting away with it.

TE: Sam LaPorta (S) (TE8 | $17 | 5.03)

Beats By Ray did not win the draft with one thunderclap pick. They won it by being right, repeatedly. Jahmyr Gibbs at RB1 anchors the roster, but the move that quietly defines this team is Jonathan Taylor, an RB4 projection snagged nearly a full round after his ADP suggested he would go. That kind of value does not announce itself, it just shows up in the standings. Jaxson Dart adds a QB11 projection taken almost two rounds late, and Rashee Rice delivers WR13 upside at a price that felt like an afterthought in round four. The weakest projected starter is Matthew Golden at WR52, and the scouting report on him is genuinely uncertain, a player whose opportunity has expanded in Green Bay but whose results have not yet matched the billing. Still, the concern is real only in proportion to how much you need him, and a team sitting 79th percentile in the field with this much projected production at the top of the roster has earned the right to absorb a flier. Beats By Ray looks the part.

Olave Chasing Downs didn't build this roster on a single lightning-rod pick, they just consistently drafted better than the market all night long. The receiver group is the engine: Ja'Marr Chase at WR2 anchors the whole operation, and manager got Chris Olave at WR11 a full round and a half after the board should have run out of patience waiting for him. DeVonta Smith at WR14 and DeVonta Smith falling nearly a round past his ADP added another layer of value on top. The team's 81st percentile tournament standing is less a ceiling than a baseline, given that last season's squad went 31-5 and finished at the 100th percentile in scoring. The draft sheet shows 14 chalk picks alongside three genuine values and a steal in Pat Freiermuth, who landed in round 18 despite projecting as TE30, giving the roster dependable production at a position that often gets squeezed late. Tyler Warren at TE4 is the one minor reach worth noting, but a team that came out ahead on three separate picks has earned the right to pay a small premium for a player projected that well.

jetpackblues is sitting at the top of the Civilization division and in the 93rd percentile of the field, and honestly, the draft sheet tells you exactly why. This roster was built with the kind of board discipline that most managers just talk about. The foundation is legitimately elite: Puka Nacua projects as WR1, Colston Loveland as TE3, and Breece Hall as RB14, three pillars that give this team a ceiling few can match. But the real craftsmanship is in the secondary layers. Trevor Lawrence, a projected QB10 starter, slid nearly two rounds past his ADP. Quentin Johnston and Rashid Shaheed, both projected starters, each fell over a round. Brenton Strange came in a round and a half late. The one minor reach on the board, Brandon Aiyuk, is so far down the draft that it barely registers as a complaint. Two steals, four values, thirteen chalk picks, and zero major reaches: that is not a lucky draft, that is a manager who knew their prices and never flinched. Clean work.
