There is no kind framing available for TheoBoBeeo's 2026 roster, and frankly the draft board explains everything. Five major reaches across the whole draft is a number that tells you a manager was not reacting to value, they were chasing a plan that the rest of the field refused to validate. Tucker Kraft at TE5 was taken nearly two rounds early, Wan'Dale Robinson at WR47 was taken three rounds early, and Tyquan Thornton at WR97 was reached on by more than five rounds in the sixteenth round of a draft where patience is the only currency that matters. Josh Allen at QB1 is genuinely excellent, and the Allen and Dalton Kincaid stack gives this team a real floor, but when your most notable steal is Matthew Golden falling to you in the fourteenth round, the draft did not go according to plan in any direction that counts. TheoBoBeeo currently sits 12th in the Fortnite division and in the 7th percentile of the field. The 2025 campaign produced a 38th percentile scoring season. There is no charitable read available.

The Lethal Llamas drafted like someone who found a cheat code and used it on the wrong game. The headline is Joe Burrow, taken nearly a full round before his ADP at the first overall area of the draft, which would be defensible if this were a quarterback-heavy format, but it is not. That early commitment set off a cascade of compensatory panic: David Njoku, projected TE29, pulled nearly four and a half rounds before his ADP; Colby Parkinson, projected TE31, grabbed three rounds early; and Chimere Dike, projected WR84 and the single most egregious selection on the board, yanked nearly eight full rounds before his ADP. Eight rounds. For a WR84. The Llamas did land Justin Jefferson and Rome Odunze at real value, and Burrow is a legitimate QB4, so the talent is not invisible. But five major reaches across a roster is not bad luck, it is a philosophy, and this philosophy has the Lethal Llamas projected eighth percentile in the field and eleventh in the Fortnite division. The draft told the story. The standings will just confirm it.

kingbuffalo enters 2026 sitting 10th in the Fortnite division and in the bottom fifth of the field, and the roster does not make a compelling argument for optimism. The top end is genuinely good: Jonathan Taylor projects as RB4, Drake Maye as QB2, and Harold Fannin as TE6, so there is real talent at the top of the lineup. The problem is what happens after that talent runs out. Josh Downs, the projected weakest starter at WR46, is the wide receiver room's entire contribution to the starting lineup, and the draft history reveals why the cupboard got so bare everywhere else. Four major reaches in a single draft is a lot of draft capital spent on conviction that the market did not share, with Javonte Williams taken 2.3 rounds early, Tory Horton taken 4.3 rounds early, and almost nothing coming back in the form of late-round value. Taylor can have a monster week and it may not matter. This roster has one gear, and the season will go exactly as far as the top of that depth chart carries it.

TE: Hunter Henry (S) (TE18 | $4 | 9.10), AJ Barner (TE24 | $2 | 11.10)

There is no polite way to say this: Nites of the Fort enters 2026 ranked ninth in the Fortnite division and in just the 31st percentile of the field, and the roster does not offer much of an argument against either number. The foundation is real enough, Jaxon Smith-Njigba at WR3 and De'Von Achane at RB6 are legitimate building blocks, but the drop-off from those two to the rest of the projected starters is steep and unforgiving. Khalil Shakir projects as the weakest starter at WR51, and on the quarterback side, the team is leaning on Cam Ward at QB23 while also carrying Fernando Mendoza, a QB27 who cost a fourth-round premium over his market price. That is a lot of draft capital spent chasing upside at a position that has yet to deliver. Ward's situation in Tennessee has genuinely improved, with real receiving weapons finally around him, but "improved situation" is not a guarantee, and betting on him this heavily while the rest of the roster grades out this thin is a gamble that last year's 8th-percentile finish suggests this team can ill afford.

TE:

TurfGuy1984 finished in the 86th percentile last year, which is the kind of number that gets you a reputation. The 32nd percentile projection for 2026 is the kind of number that gets you a reality check. The core tension here is a wide receiver group that is genuinely excellent, led by Puka Nacua at WR1, with Ladd McConkey at WR20 and Emeka Egbuka at WR18 rounding out a starting core that any manager in the Fortnite division would envy, and then everything else. The draft did not help clarify matters. Three major reaches, including Derrick Henry pulled more than a round early at RB12 and Kyle Monangai grabbed a stunning three rounds before his ADP at RB33, suggest a manager who drafted with more conviction than the market could support. At quarterback, Bryce Young sits at QB26, a player who has spent his career hovering around QB20 and whose best-case scenario, a leap powered by a suddenly interesting Carolina weapons room, still only gets TurfGuy1984 to average. Last year's percentile was earned. This year's will have to be rebuilt from scratch.

The Niteman Cometh did almost everything right on draft day and still ended up somewhere most managers would rather not be, sitting 7th in the Fortnite division at the 39th percentile. That is the particular cruelty on display here: this team drafted with discipline, collecting Jaylen Waddle at WR23 a full two rounds after his ADP and DeVonta Smith at WR14 nearly two rounds late as well, and yet the board refused to cooperate where it mattered most. The receiver group is genuinely excellent, with CeeDee Lamb projected at WR5 anchoring a corps that includes Smith, Garrett Wilson at WR17, and Waddle. The problem is that Lamar Jackson at QB3 was the only elite asset acquired at reasonable cost, because Bo Nix cost a fourth-round pick on a QB15 projection and Mark Andrews was drafted nearly three rounds early for a TE14. Good value at the margins cannot paper over reaches in premium rounds. The Niteman Cometh found bargains and still overspent on the things that were supposed to hold the bargains together.

TalkToTheLAMB is a team built for a coin-flip season, which is another way of saying it is built to drive you absolutely insane. The foundation is genuinely impressive: Bijan Robinson at RB2 and Ashton Jeanty at RB7 give this roster a pair of projected starters who can carry a week on their own, and Tyler Warren at TE4 adds a top-shelf option at a position where most of the field is settling for far less. The trouble is that the ceiling stops there and the floor arrives faster than you'd like. Marvin Harrison Jr. projects as WR33, the kind of number that looks fine until you realize the margins in a tournament field this competitive do not forgive "fine." The draft was almost entirely chalk, with just two values surfacing: Harrison and KC Concepcion, both falling roughly a round and a half past their ADPs. No steals, no catastrophic reaches, no swings. This is a roster that will go exactly as far as Robinson, Jeanty, and Warren carry it, and not one inch further.

yzrfantasy didn't need a lottery ticket to build something real. The foundation is legitimate: Christian McCaffrey at RB3 and Amon-Ra St. Brown at WR4 give this roster a pair of projected top-five players at their positions before the rest of the lineup even gets factored in. What makes the draft genuinely impressive is how the middle and late rounds held up. Rashee Rice landed at pick 6.01 despite an ADP nearly two rounds earlier, and Jonathon Brooks fell a full three rounds to round 15, the kind of patient accumulation that turns a good roster into a deep one. Malik Nabers at WR12 and Jeremiyah Love at RB13 round out a starting group with real firepower. The quarterback situation is the one area where the projections are modest, with Jordan Love at QB17 and Kyler Murray at QB19, but in a positionless format the lineup flexibility softens that considerably. This team went 27-9 last season and scored in the 86th percentile. The 2026 construction suggests that was no fluke.

Feeling Tilted lands at 71st percentile in the tournament and fourth in the Fortnite division, and the draft record tells you exactly how they got there: no major reaches, three legitimate values, and thirteen picks taken right at consensus. That kind of discipline is harder to execute than it sounds. The centerpiece is Jahmyr Gibbs, who comes in as RB1, and pairing him with Omarion Hampton at RB9 gives this roster a foundation that most teams in the field simply cannot match. Chris Olave is the quiet story of the draft, falling roughly 1.6 rounds past his ADP to land at WR11, which is the sort of thing that happens when a room moves on from a receiver and one manager stays patient. Jayden Daniels slots in at QB5 and was taken about four picks ahead of where the market had him, a minor overpay that barely registers given what surrounds him. There is no single flashy moment to point to here, just a consistent series of decisions that left Feeling Tilted holding a stronger hand than most managers realized they were building.

There was no moment in bmiller14's draft where the room gasped, and that's kind of the point. This is a roster built on accumulation, on grinding out an edge pick after pick until the advantages stack up quietly and you look up and realize you're sitting at 86th percentile in the field and third in the Fortnite division. The foundation is legitimate: Brock Bowers at TE1 and A.J. Brown at WR8 give this team a ceiling that most managers would trade a late-round gamble to match. Then consider Brian Thomas Jr., projected WR31, snagged nearly two rounds after his ADP. Thomas had a rough 2025 between injuries and a complicated chemistry situation with Trevor Lawrence, which is precisely why he fell, and precisely why bmiller14 was right to take the value. The draft was nearly two-thirds chalk, but chalk mixed with a few well-timed selections beats a flashy swing-and-miss strategy every time. Nothing here screams lottery ticket. It just quietly, persistently wins the room.

Nite King sits at 86th percentile in the field and second in the Fortnite division, and the draft sheet tells you exactly why: disciplined, clean, and loaded with value at the spots that matter. Nico Collins at WR9 slipped nearly a full round past his ADP, Terry McLaurin at WR24 fell almost two, and George Kittle at TE9 came in over a round late. That is not luck, that is a manager who knew the board and waited. The top end is where this roster really announces itself: James Cook projected at RB5, Collins and Zay Flowers both projected starters at receiver, and Trey McBride sitting at TE2 as the anchor of the whole operation. Then there is Patrick Mahomes, who tore his ACL and LCL late in 2025 but is reportedly ahead of schedule in his recovery. If Mahomes is healthy and starting in Week 1, this team has no soft spots at the top of the lineup. Nite King did not just accumulate names. They accumulated the right names at the right prices.

TE: Eli Stowers (TE32 | $1 | 16.07), Max Klare (TE- | $0 | 19.06)

LukeSawhook sits first in the Fortnite division and in the 99th percentile of the field, and the draft record tells you exactly why: six values, twelve chalk, one minor reach, and nothing to apologize for. The engine of this roster is a receiver corps that would make most managers genuinely uncomfortable to face, with Ja'Marr Chase at WR2, Drake London at WR7, and George Pickens at WR10 all projecting as starters. Dak Prescott fell a full round past his ADP, and pairing him with Pickens in a stack adds a layer of upside that efficient drafters love to hunt. The deeper story, though, is Luther Burden. Chicago kept Burden restrained early in 2025, but once his snap share opened up he was on pace for 72 catches and 1,000 yards, and now head coach Ben Johnson is drawing Amon-Ra St. Brown comparisons in camp. If Burden delivers on that promise, LukeSawhook has a WR22 who plays like something much better. A 2025 finish in the 25th percentile in scoring makes this turnaround all the more striking.
