There is no spin available for what @ DynastyBenzo built in the Claptrap division, and the numbers confirm it: sitting 8th percentile in the tournament and last in the division, this roster is a case study in what happens when a drafter wants things they cannot quite have. The most charitable version of the story is that Kyle Pitts, Travis Kelce, and Tyler Warren represent genuine positional upside at TE4, TE7, and TE10, and Justin Jefferson at WR6 gives the lineup a real anchor. But Pitts was a major reach at 4.03 when his ADP sat a full round and a half later, Kelce and Brenton Strange were both pulled early with nothing to show for the urgency, and the quarterback room behind all of it features Sam Darnold at QB21 as the best of a grim options. Three major reaches, zero steals, and a weakest projected starter in Tony Pollard at RB30 tells you everything: @ DynastyBenzo spent premium capital chasing upside that was already baked in, and left the rest of the roster to absorb the damage.

There is no elegant way to spin an 11th-place division ranking and a 29th-percentile tournament projection, so j4ce, let's just be honest with each other. The foundation here is real: Lamar Jackson at QB3 and Jonathan Taylor at RB4 are legitimate top-end anchors, and Jeremiyah Love at RB13 and Bucky Irving at RB21 give the roster genuine depth behind them. But the draft offered almost no help in building around that core. Sixteen chalk picks, zero steals, and a best value of Jameson Williams sliding barely a round past his ADP is the paper trail of a draft that never found a gear. The back end of the projected starters tells the rest of the story: Chuba Hubbard grading out as the weakest projected starter at RB29 is not catastrophic on its own, but when the floor of your lineup is already set and the draft produced nothing to raise it, you are left watching a ceiling that probably topped out in round two. J4ce came back from a 13th-percentile scoring season in 2025 looking for a reset, and this roster feels less like a reset than a continuation.

Tiden did everything right at the draft table and still landed at 10th in the Claptrap division, which is the kind of outcome that makes you question the entire enterprise. The value discipline was genuine: fourteen picks at chalk, three that came in past ADP, zero major reaches across the whole board. The problem is that discipline and quality are not the same thing, and the roster illustrates the gap. CeeDee Lamb at WR5 is a legitimate anchor, and Luther Burden at WR22 carries real upside if the hype surrounding his expanded role in Chicago translates into a full season rather than a highlight reel. But the projected starter pool thins quickly after that, with Jakobi Meyers sitting at WR45 as the weakest projected contributor. De'Von Achane at RB6 is excellent. Below him the depth grades out as serviceable at best. Tiden bought every asset at fair market value, assembled a portfolio of correctly priced pieces, and still ended up with a team projected in the 31st percentile. The draft was efficient. The outcome remains cruel.

tiemusgw did almost everything right on draft day and still ended up 9th in the Claptrap division, which is the kind of outcome that makes you question the whole enterprise. Christian McCaffrey at RB3 slipping to the second round was a genuine gift, and Xavier Worthy falling nearly three full rounds past his ADP looked like the kind of late-round score that separates good managers from lucky ones. And yet here they sit at the 35th percentile, because value only matters if the players you accumulate are actually good, and this roster is long on WR44-through-WR99 types who may never see a starting lineup. Malik Nabers at WR12 and Garrett Wilson at WR17 give the team a credible core, but the back end thins out fast, and the Keenan Allen selection, taken nearly five rounds before his ADP, is the kind of reach that haunts a roster built on discipline. tiemusgw drafted smart, spent efficiently, and still produced a team that projects to struggle. That is not bad luck. That is the ceiling of a value-first strategy that never found a marquee centerpiece.

Last year cspooner13 finished in the 89th percentile, and anyone who watched that team operate knows the name carries weight in the Claptrap division. The 2026 version, currently projected 37th percentile and sitting eighth in the division, is going to spend most of the season cashing checks that reputation wrote. The foundation is genuinely strong: Josh Allen at QB1 stacking with D.J. Moore at WR26 gives this team a legitimate high-ceiling combination, and A.J. Brown at WR8 and Mark Andrews at TE14 are the kind of projected starters that make a lineup defensible. But the draft tells a quieter story. Fifteen chalk picks, zero steals, and a major reach on Pat Bryant, taken nearly three rounds before his ADP, suggest a manager who drafted with comfort rather than conviction. Breece Hall and Kyren Williams project as capable contributors, but the floor here leans on projected starters like Jaylen Warren, rated the weakest of the bunch. The 2025 trophy stays on the shelf. The 2026 table is still being set.

TeamBeatdown704 is the kind of team that wins eight games and loses in the first round, and the draft reflects exactly that outcome. The foundation is real: Jahmyr Gibbs at RB1 and Omarion Hampton at RB9 give this roster a ceiling that most managers in the Claptrap division cannot match, and a Justin Herbert / Ladd McConkey stack adds a wrinkle worth monitoring, particularly with Mike McDaniel now running the offense and making Herbert a more compelling weekly option than he has been under a run-first regime. But the margins are where this team bleeds. Fourteen chalk picks and four minor reaches suggest a manager who drafted what was in front of him rather than hunting edges, and the two major reaches on Kenyon Sadiq at TE21 and Mason Taylor at TE35, taken 2.1 and 3.2 rounds early respectively, are the clearest example of premium capital buying mediocre production at the projected starter spot. A 38th-percentile projection is not a death sentence. It is a ceiling that demands everything to break right and nothing to break wrong.

TE:

Zero finished last season at exactly .500 and 75th percentile in scoring, which sounds like a foundation to build on until you look at what this roster actually projects to do in 2026. The receiver group is genuinely impressive, with Jaxon Smith-Njigba (WR3), Drake London (WR7), Chris Olave (WR11), and DeVonta Smith (WR14) all grading out as projected starters, and Jaylen Waddle (WR23) arriving in Denver with a real passing offense around him for the first time in years. That's a legitimate strength. The problem is that the rest of the roster is fighting gravity, and the draft didn't help much. Two major reaches, including Troy Franklin at WR80 taken more than seven rounds ahead of his ADP, burned capital that could have addressed the team's most obvious drag: Malik Willis at QB24, projecting as the weakest starter on the roster. You can paper over a lot of things in a positionless format, but when your quarterback is that far down the depth chart, the ceiling has a low beam right in the middle of it. Zero is seventh in the Claptrap division and sitting at the 37th percentile. The receivers are doing their part. Everything else is the problem.

MightyBills716 did not stumble into a Bengals stack, they built toward it. Joe Burrow at QB4 and Ja'Marr Chase at WR2 are the engine, and the rest of the roster exists largely to keep that engine fueled. George Pickens at WR10 and Emeka Egbuka at WR18 give Burrow additional pop, meaning MightyBills716 can effectively flood the lineup with Cincinnati exposure and let one monster game carry the week. When the Bengals are on, this team is genuinely terrifying. The concern is what happens when they are not. The non-stack contributors are a mixed bag: Tucker Kraft projects as a TE5 and anchors the back end, but the ground game leans on David Montgomery, who spent last season ceding work to Jahmyr Gibbs in Detroit and now heads to Houston hoping a competition with Woody Marks resolves in his favor. That is a projection with asterisks attached. Sitting at 45th percentile in the field, MightyBills716 is not a broken roster, just a correlated one, and correlation is a coin that lands on either side.

amyg didn't win the draft with one thunderbolt pick. The draft just kept going right, round after round, until the roster was quietly better than most people in the Claptrap division will realize until Week 6. The engine is a projected starter pairing of Bijan Robinson (RB2) and Colston Loveland (TE3), two top-of-position players who would anchor any competitive team in this field. Stack Loveland with Caleb Williams (QB6) and amyg has a connected scoring thread running through the lineup on any given week. What makes the draft particularly clean is the absence of damage: zero major reaches, and the minor ones, like Jake Ferguson (TE12) and Chigoziem Okonkwo (TE19), targeted players with real projected value rather than speculative lottery tickets. Harold Fannin (TE6) and Isaiah Likely (TE13) round out a group of projected starters that quietly elevated this roster without requiring a single reach that will haunt anyone come September. The 2025 season landed in the 69th percentile in scoring, and this roster looks built to push past that ceiling.

SmashMonk3y sits third in the Claptrap division and at the 70th percentile tournament-wide, but the draft sheet tells a more flattering story than the standings do. Five values and two steals across the board, with almost nothing paid over market, is the mark of a manager who waited out the crowd rather than chased names. The headliner is Matthew Stafford, a QB14 projection snagged more than two rounds after his ADP, which is remarkable given that Stafford just came off an MVP-caliber season and is entering what amounts to a farewell campaign with real motivation to prove the Rams wrong about his replacement. Pair that with James Cook at RB5 and Trey McBride at TE2, both projected starters anchoring the lineup, and SmashMonk3y has the kind of high-floor core that makes weekly decisions easier. Chase Brown adds RB11 upside at a discount, and Terrance Ferguson fell three-plus rounds past his ADP to land as late insurance that functions more like a find. The one blemish, Antonio Williams taken two rounds early, barely registers on a sheet this tidy.

TE: Brock Bowers (S) (TE1 | $53 | 2.04), Elijah Arroyo (TE40 | $0 | 18.04)

Funky13 didn't build this roster on one splashy move, they built it by winning the small moments over and over again, and the cumulative effect is a team that lands at 80th percentile in the field with a genuine case to go higher. The foundation is Brock Bowers, a TE1 taken at 2.04 when the position wasn't supposed to be that good until pick 1.07, a full eight-tenths of a round of free value just sitting there. Layer in Saquon Barkley at RB8, plucked 1.2 rounds past his ADP in round four, and C.J. Stroud at QB22 falling all the way to 11.09, and you have a draft that didn't just find one bargain, it found three across multiple positions. The projected starters read like a manager who understood where the market was wrong: Amon-Ra St. Brown at WR4, Kenneth Walker III at RB10, Stroud and Bowers giving positional upside at spots where others settled. This team came out ahead at every turn, and 80th percentile may end up looking like a modest description.

BostonGeorge finished 2025 in the 82nd percentile and somehow got better. Sitting first in the Claptrap division and at the 99th tournament percentile in 2026, this roster is the product of a manager who knew what they wanted and waited for the board to deliver it. The draft tells the whole story: no major reaches anywhere, three outright steals, and five more picks taken at genuine value. Jordan Love fell more than three full rounds past his ADP before BostonGeorge scooped him at WR17, and Dak Prescott landed a full round and a half late at QB7. That kind of patience compounds. Up front, Puka Nacua projects as WR1 with Nico Collins at WR9 and Tee Higgins at WR19 all lining up as projected starters, and even the supposed weak link, Dallas Goedert at TE15, is a player who just re-signed with Philadelphia and posted four touchdowns in a three-week stretch during last year's fantasy playoffs. When that's your floor, you're in exceptional shape.
