Samothman2123 sits dead last in the Duck Hunt division and in the bottom quarter of the field, and the roster makes it pretty easy to understand why. The top end is real, Christian McCaffrey at RB3 and Breece Hall at RB14 give this team a legitimate foundation, but the supporting cast fades fast, and the receiver group is where the wheels come off. Drake London at WR7 is a genuine asset, but Antonio Williams at WR64 and Chris Bell at WR87 are the kind of names that make you wince when you see them in a starting lineup. The draft did not help matters much: eleven chalk picks, one major reach in Kenneth Walker III taken nearly a full round early, and zero steals to offset the damage. Dallas Goedert at TE15 quietly offers some stability, a player who proved last year he can carry a passing game when things break right in Philadelphia, but one steady tight end does not fix a receiver group that projects this thin at the top. Samothman2123 needs a lot to go right and has very few levers left to pull.

ThaDirtyDawgs sit 11th in Duck Hunt and in the 23rd percentile of the field, and the draft is where the damage was done. Five major reaches in a single draft is not bad luck, it is a philosophy, and that philosophy keeps delivering the same result. Dontayvion Wicks arrived 7.2 rounds early, Malachi Fields 4.5 rounds early, Emmett Johnson 3.8 rounds early, and J.J. McCarthy 3.6 rounds early, and not one of them projects as a starter. That is not a rounding error, that is a pattern of conviction in players the market had quietly, clearly, and repeatedly declined to share. The floor here is Josh Allen stacking with D.J. Moore, and A.J. Brown projecting as WR8 gives the team a genuine anchor, but the 2025 record was 15-21 and the roster construction has not answered why 2026 should look different. When your weakest projected starter is Jayden Reed at WR48 and your depth behind him includes Wicks and Fields, the math does not ask for optimism.

There is no polite way to dress this up: the DarkWingeD Ducks are sitting 10th in the Duck Hunt division and project at just the 26th percentile of the field, and the draft did not do much to improve the outlook. The manager leaned heavily on chalk, produced zero steals, and then compounded the damage with two major reaches late, burning a 14th-round pick on Ja'Kobi Lane (WR89) and a 17th-round pick on Keenan Allen (WR99), players taken five-plus rounds ahead of consensus in slots where surplus value is the only reasonable goal. Ja'Marr Chase (WR2) and Tyler Warren (TE4) give the roster a real foundation, and James Cook (RB5) quietly slid to 2.08 despite carrying an ADP of 2.04, a minor gift. But one good value and two genuine stars cannot carry a roster whose weakest projected starter is Xavier Worthy (WR49) and whose draft capital was spent reinforcing the back end with aging or speculative options. The Ducks went 24-12 a year ago, so the pedigree is there, but this particular build offers very little margin for error and no obvious lever left to pull.

TE: Dalton Schultz (TE22 | $3 | 12.03), Cade Otton (TE27 | $2 | 13.10)

restartthecarr enters 2026 sitting ninth in the Duck Hunt division and at the 34th percentile of the field, and the draft history explains most of why. The team did land some value, Bucky Irving and Courtland Sutton both fell a round or more past their ADPs, and Justin Jefferson anchors the lineup as a projected WR6. But the draft also produced two major reaches, and the worse of the pair is now the weakest projected starter: Khalil Shakir, a WR51, was taken more than two rounds early, burning a pick on a player who projects as a fringe starter at best. Meanwhile, the team has no viable options at tight end, with Dalton Schultz and Cade Otton projecting at TE22 and TE27 respectively, a dead zone that quietly drags down the ceiling every week. Jefferson is real, Drake Maye as a projected QB2 is a genuine asset, and the 2025 scoring record was dismal enough that things probably cannot get worse. But ninth in the division is not a typo, and there is no obvious move that turns this into a contender.

noddingdonkey ran a clean draft. Two genuine values, zero reaches, eighteen picks right at market price. On paper, that discipline should translate into a competitive roster, and yet here is the team sitting at 45th percentile with an 8th-place division ranking, which is the kind of outcome that makes you question whether efficiency matters at all. The issue is not process, it is ceiling. Amon-Ra St. Brown at WR4 is a genuine anchor, and the Joe Burrow / Tee Higgins stack gives the roster a connective tissue that can produce multi-player game-week explosions. But after Higgins at WR19, the receiver depth falls sharply to Jakobi Meyers at WR45 and Jauan Jennings at WR63, and the backfield is similarly weighted toward volume over upside. Bhayshul Tuten is the most interesting name on the roster, a Jacksonville back with legitimate starter potential now that Travis Etienne has departed for New Orleans, but "legitimate starter potential" is doing heavy lifting on a team that needs proven production. noddingdonkey bought everything at fair value and ended up with a portfolio that pays modest dividends at best.

drew0602 is the fantasy equivalent of a .500 team that keeps you honest but never keeps you up at night, sitting at 48th percentile in the field and seventh in Duck Hunt after a rough 2025 that produced a 12-24 record. The margins here are real and they cut both ways. On one end, Jaxon Smith-Njigba at WR3 and Chris Olave at WR11 give this roster a legitimate top-shelf foundation, the kind of firepower that wins weeks outright when the ball moves. On the other end, the supporting cast thins quickly, and Brian Thomas Jr. arrives at WR31 carrying genuine uncertainty: his 2025 was derailed by injuries and questions about his chemistry with Trevor Lawrence that never fully resolved. That is not a death sentence, but it is exactly the type of coin flip that separates a 9-win season from a 6-win one. Caleb Williams at QB6 was drafted a round early, a reach that cost draft capital without guaranteeing upside. Drew0602 has the skeleton of a contender. Whether the flesh fills in depends almost entirely on which version of Thomas shows up.

KD2ndST is the team that lives and dies by the margins, and right now those margins are razor-thin in both directions. The backfield anchored by Jahmyr Gibbs (RB1) and Ashton Jeanty (RB7) gives this roster a legitimate foundation to build around, and Nico Collins (WR9) adds another top-shelf piece that most managers in the middle of the field simply do not have. The problem is that the draft capital spent chasing quarterback production undercuts all of it. Jared Goff (QB16) cost a fourth-round pick, and C.J. Stroud (QB22) cost a sixth, each taken well before the market said to. Those reaches burned real resources that could have shored up depth. The one draft bright spot is Isaiah Likely (TE13), grabbed at 11.01 despite an ADP closer to the eighth round. Following John Harbaugh to New York and stepping into a light tight end room, Likely has real upside at that price. A 50th percentile roster coming off a 21st percentile scoring season, KD2ndST does not need luck. It needs execution. There is a difference.

TE: Colby Parkinson (TE31 | $1 | 15.03)

The Ha Ha Clinton-Dixons sit at 50th percentile heading into 2026, which sounds middling until you look at what they actually assembled. The draft sheet shows three major reaches, and the roster shows it didn't matter. Taking Dak Prescott at 2.10 when the board had him pegged nearly a round later looks aggressive on paper, but Prescott slots in as QB7 with a George Pickens stack attached, and that pairing gives this team a weekly ceiling that most managers in the Duck Hunt division would trade for. The gambles didn't always pay off cleanly, Chris Rodriguez cost three-plus rounds of draft capital beyond his ADP and lands at RB48, which is a price you wince at later. But then Quentin Johnston and Jordan Addison both fell more than a round past their ADPs, and the manager scooped both, so the draft board giveth and taketh away. The foundation underneath all of it is Bijan Robinson at RB2 and six projected starters at receiver, led by George Pickens at WR10. This roster earned its record the hard way.

Last year was a 6th-percentile disaster for LightGunner, a team that looked like it was trying to lose on purpose and nearly succeeded. The 2026 roster tells a very different story. Jonathan Taylor at RB4 and Chase Brown at RB11 give this lineup a genuine backfield foundation, and Jeremiyah Love projecting as RB13 means the depth behind them is not decorative. At the top of the receiver room, CeeDee Lamb at WR5 is the kind of anchor that changes how a roster breathes. Add Harold Fannin at TE6 and Travis Kelce at TE10, and suddenly LightGunner has legitimate upside at nearly every starting spot. The quarterback picture is murkier, with Jaxson Dart projecting as QB11 but carrying enough uncertainty that Daniel Jones lurks as a real fallback, and the draft was heavy on chalk with no true steals. Still, landing at the 57th percentile of the field is a genuine rebound from the basement, and the talent at the top of this roster is real enough to push higher. Division rank of fourth leaves room to climb.

Duck Slayers didn't make headlines on draft day, and that's exactly the point. This is a team built on consistent execution, the kind of draft where the board keeps breaking your way in small increments that add up to something real. Garrett Wilson, projected WR17, slid more than a round past his ADP and landed in the fifth. Saquon Barkley, a top-ten running back at RB8, fell nearly a full round before Duck Slayers scooped him up. Trey McBride at TE2 and Sam LaPorta at TE8 give the top of this roster a ceiling that very few teams in the field can match, and with Rashee Rice projected at WR13 and Jayden Daniels at QB5, the projected starters read like a draft recap you'd want to write home about. Daniels was the one swing where Duck Slayers paid up early, but the rest of the board validated the approach. A 99th-percentile scoring finish in 2025 suggests this manager knows how to turn a well-constructed roster into points, and the 2026 version gave them every reason to expect more of the same.

harrisc10 didn't need a lottery ticket to build this roster. The process was quiet, methodical, and it worked. The centerpiece is Puka Nacua at WR1, a legitimate top-of-the-board asset, and the manager surrounded him without ever reaching badly enough to compromise the back half of the draft. The signature move came at pick 6.11, when Malik Nabers, projected WR12, slid three full rounds past his ADP and harrisc10 was simply there to collect. That kind of patience defines the whole exercise. Colston Loveland at TE3 and Jake Ferguson at TE12 add starter-caliber production at a position where the field thins quickly, and Jaylen Waddle and Zay Flowers round out a group that projects to put points on the board consistently. Jalen Hurts was taken about a round early at QB9, but that is the one mild indulgence on an otherwise disciplined sheet. The 2025 résumé, 31 wins and 95th-percentile scoring, suggests this manager knows how to convert a good draft into a good season. Heading into 2026, second in the Duck Hunt division and 78th percentile in the field, harrisc10 looks like a genuine threat.

TE: Brock Bowers (S) (TE1 | $53 | 1.08), Tucker Kraft (S) (TE5 | $23 | 4.05), Jake Tonges (TE34 | $0 | 19.08)

FlexesInTexas sits atop the Duck Hunt division and in the 91st percentile of the field, and the draft record explains why: five value picks, thirteen chalk selections, and only two reaches across the entire roster. That is not a team that swung for the fences and got lucky. That is a team that kept winning small. De'Von Achane landed at RB6 a full round after his ADP suggested he would be gone, Parker Washington came in nearly two rounds late at WR35, and Brock Bowers, the TE1, anchors the whole operation. Davante Adams rounds out a Stafford stack that gives the roster a reliable floor on weeks when other managers are sweating injury reports. The one genuine question mark is Marvin Harrison Jr., a WR33 projection who has posted back-to-back underwhelming seasons and now faces a quarterback situation in Arizona that remains unsettled heading into the year. That is a real risk. But on a roster built this consistently, one uncertain piece is a footnote, not a flaw.
