JX2Jackson lands at 12th in the Galaga division and the 11th percentile of the field, and the draft record tells you exactly why: five major reaches against a single steal, with the reaches clustering so badly in the late rounds that they read less like a strategy and more like a panic spiral. The team is not without talent, Ashton Jeanty at RB7 and Omarion Hampton at RB9 give the roster a legitimate foundation, but Jeanty was taken 1.3 rounds ahead of his ADP at 1.05, meaning JX2Jackson paid top-of-the-board rent on a player who was already going in the second round anyway. Then, as if to complete the portrait, the manager spent picks 15 through 18 snatching Mike Washington Jr., Kimani Vidal, Sean Tucker, and Darnell Washington a combined fifteen rounds before the market agreed they were worth it. The projected weakest starter is Michael Pittman at WR44, who somehow qualifies as the draft's lone steal. When your best bargain is your weakest projected contributor, the math is already doing the eulogizing for you.

charps did almost everything right on draft day. Drake Maye landed at QB2, Brock Bowers at TE1, and the board was worked with patience rather than panic, producing four values and only one genuine reach of consequence in Zach Charbonnet, grabbed nearly three rounds ahead of his ADP. The math should work. It does not. The team sits 10th in the Galaga division and in just the 19th percentile of the field, and no single catastrophic mistake explains it, which is somehow worse than if one did. The closest thing to a culprit is Brock Purdy, who looked like a foundation piece and has instead become a pile of question marks: turf toe last season, weapons disappearing around him, and enough uncertainty heading into 2026 that even his projected QB13 rank carries an asterisk that feels more like a warning than a credential. charps drafted the value game correctly and the roster still does not add up. That is the draft's cruelest trick, and it has been played here at full volume.

Lakeg1rl did almost everything right in the draft room. The roster logs five values against just one major reach, which is the kind of efficiency that should produce a roster worth bragging about. And yet, here we are: 11th in the Galaga division, 19th percentile in the field, a team that graded out correctly and still doesn't quite get there. The construction makes sense on paper. CeeDee Lamb at WR5 anchors the top end, and Ladd McConkey fell a full round and a half to land at WR20, a genuine bargain. Luther Burden, projected WR22, carries real upside if the Ben Johnson hype translates, and the Bears' own head coach is comparing him to Amon-Ra St. Brown, which is the kind of camp noise that sounds ridiculous right up until it doesn't. The problem is everything below that tier is merely fine, Josh Jacobs at RB16 reached two rounds early and delivers middling value for the price, and Makai Lemon at WR40 is the projected weakest starter. Lakeg1rl didn't draft poorly. She just didn't draft well enough, and those two things can look identical in the standings.

TE: Trey McBride (S) (TE2 | $53 | 1.11), Hunter Henry (S) (TE18 | $4 | 10.02)

McNasty428 sits ninth in the Galaga division and in the 21st percentile of the field, and the draft record offers little reason for optimism: zero steals, zero values, and five reaches against fifteen chalk picks. The major reaches tell the story most bluntly. Malik Willis at QB24 was taken nearly three rounds early, and Jaydon Blue at RB70 was grabbed almost seven rounds ahead of his ADP, which is the kind of aggressive future-betting that tends to punish managers when the present comes due. Jonathan Taylor at RB4 and Trey McBride at TE2 are genuine anchors, the sort of players who can carry a lineup on a given week, but below them the projected starters thin out fast. Matthew Stafford grades as QB14 and Tee Higgins as WR19, which are serviceable numbers, but KC Concepcion at WR50 is the projected weakest starter, and that floor is low enough to matter in a competitive field. There is no obvious trade asset to flip, no undervalued depth waiting to break out. McNasty428 is not in rebuild mode so much as quiet freefall.

MetalDave enters 2026 sitting eighth in the Galaga division and in just the 28th percentile of the field, and the draft board does not offer much reason for optimism. The receiver group is legitimately elite, anchored by Puka Nacua at WR1 and A.J. Brown at WR8, and Kyle Pitts, George Kittle, and Travis Kelce give this roster a genuinely impressive top end. But the quarterback situation is a quiet catastrophe waiting to happen. Jared Goff grades out as a QB16, Daniel Jones sits at QB25, and Aaron Rodgers lands at QB29, meaning MetalDave essentially drafted three backup-tier options and called it a plan. Worse, Jones was a major reach, taken 4.2 rounds before his ADP, which means MetalDave paid premium capital to secure a QB25. In a positionless format, every roster slot is precious, and burning a round-seven pick on Jones while Goff was still on the board is the kind of draft decision that quietly poisons a season before it starts. The receiver talent is real, but talent at the top cannot mask the drag pulling from below.

oskiwowwow enters 2026 sitting seventh in the Galaga division and projected at just the 40th percentile of the field, and the roster construction explains why. The headliners are real: Jahmyr Gibbs projects as RB1, and Saquon Barkley slots in as RB8, giving this team a genuinely elite top end. But the draft largely went chalk, with only two values identified across the entire board, and the cost of chasing depth showed up in the skill positions that matter most. The receiving corps is thin enough to be alarming, with Jordyn Tyson projecting as the top option at WR34 among projected starters. Dallas Goedert, who quietly saved fantasy rosters during the playoffs last year with a four-touchdown stretch in three weeks and then re-signed in Philadelphia when most expected him gone, grades out as TE15, which is fine but not a difference-maker. This team needed the draft to surface a hidden weapon somewhere and it mostly did not. Gibbs and Barkley are a strong foundation, but foundations do not win tournaments when the rest of the structure is this thin.

Wiseguy2020 is the kind of team that wins the weeks it should and drops the ones that sting, and the 2026 season looks like more of the same. The ceiling is real: Josh Allen at QB1 and Nico Collins at WR9 give this roster a legitimate top end, and Tucker Kraft at TE5 is a genuine weekly edge at a position where most managers are settling. The floor, though, is where the margins bite. Three major reaches in the draft, including Mason Taylor at TE35 and Justin Fields at QB38, suggest a manager who pressed at the wrong moments, burning late capital on redundant depth rather than upside. The projected starters are serviceable, but RJ Harvey sitting as the weakest of them at RB28 is a weekly coin flip that could quietly sink a close week. Last year's 53 percent win rate and 61st-percentile scoring say it plainly: this roster competes without dominating, and in the Galaga division, sitting sixth means the margin for error is almost nonexistent.

ScottBischoffFBG finished 2025 at the 96th percentile and returns in 2026 sitting at the 44th, which tells you everything about how quickly the margin between contender and also-ran can close. The floor here is real: Christian McCaffrey at RB3, De'Von Achane at RB6, and Breece Hall at RB14 give this roster a tier of projected starters that most managers would envy. But the ceiling has soft spots. Jayden Daniels projects as a QB5 and came as a genuine value, falling nearly a full round past his ADP, yet Brenton Strange projects as the weakest starter on the board at TE17, and that gap at the margins is exactly where fifth-place finishes in the Galaga division get decided. The draft was almost entirely chalk, with just two values and one move that raised eyebrows, Demond Claiborne taken 3.2 rounds ahead of his ADP. None of that is fatal. This is a team built to be competitive, not dominant, and in a format where a few projection misses either way can swing the whole season, "competitive" is a coin flip waiting to land.

kevinmoody did not reshape the draft board or swing for the fences on a single transformative pick. What this roster reflects instead is something quieter and harder to replicate: round after round of coming out slightly ahead. Garrett Wilson, projected WR17, slipped a full round past his ADP before kevinmoody stepped in, and Jonathon Brooks landed at a similar discount. Those are not headline moments, but they compound. The receiver group that resulted is genuinely difficult to argue with, anchored by Jaxon Smith-Njigba at WR3 and DeVonta Smith at WR14, with Wilson and Mike Evans adding real depth to the starting mix. Lamar Jackson as a projected QB3 does not hurt. The one question mark worth watching is Dalton Kincaid, a solid contributor alongside Josh Allen when healthy, but whose knee situation entering 2026 remains unresolved. A 65th-percentile projection and a fourth-place division standing feel like a floor here, not a ceiling, for a team built on the kind of steady, unflashy competence that tends to look smarter as the season wears on.

pbrownmiller lands at 89th percentile in the field and third in the Galaga Division, and the draft sheet looks like someone spent most of their capital on quarterback insurance nobody asked for. Tua Tagovailoa went 2.6 rounds early, Michael Penix Jr. went 3.2 rounds early, and Jacoby Brissett was snagged nearly two rounds ahead of schedule, all behind Patrick Mahomes, who projects as QB12. That is a lot of late-round equity burned on a position that may never matter. And yet the receiver haul is genuinely difficult to argue with: Amon-Ra St. Brown at WR4, Justin Jefferson at WR6, George Pickens at WR10, and Rashee Rice at WR13, four projected starters who give this team a weekly ceiling that most managers would trade their whole draft for. The Mahomes and Rice stack adds a bonus layer. The QB spending looks like a fixation, but the rest of the board looks like a plan that worked. Sometimes conviction and luck arrive wearing the same jersey, and pbrownmiller does not seem too concerned with sorting out which is which.

CoinflipsFury didn't build this roster by swinging for the fences. They built it by winning small, and the cumulative effect lands them in the 92nd percentile of the field, second in the Galaga Division. The clearest example is Tyler Warren, projected TE4, who fell nearly two full rounds past his ADP before this team scooped him up in the fifth. Pair that with Drake London, a projected WR7 snagged half a round late, and you start to see the pattern: not luck, not genius, just consistent patience at the board. Ja'Marr Chase at WR2 and Colston Loveland at TE3 give CoinflipsFury a ceiling that most managers would trade their entire draft for, and the supporting cast, Drake London, Zay Flowers, and D.J. Moore projecting as WR7, WR16, and WR26 respectively, ensures that ceiling gets tested every week. This is what a competent, unflashy draft looks like when the results finally get tallied. It turns out boring wins.

There is not much to argue with here. dlfkenm sits first in the Galaga division and in the 95th percentile of the field, and the draft tells you exactly why: five values, no reaches, and a manager who clearly knew where the board was going before it got there. Jalen Hurts at QB9 landing in the fifth round despite five consecutive top-10 fantasy finishes is the kind of discount that wins leagues, even if the loss of A.J. Brown to New England puts his passing game under real scrutiny for the first time. Dak Prescott at QB7 slipping more than a round past his ADP gives the roster a genuine insurance policy that most managers would envy as a centerpiece. Then there is the running back core, Bijan Robinson at RB2, James Cook at RB5, and Kenneth Walker III at RB10 all projected starters, all acquired without a hint of overpaying. Xavier Worthy at WR49 is technically the weakest projected starter, and even that is hard to get worked up about. This is what disciplined drafting looks like when it goes right.
