TE:

Roydawg13 finished 22nd percentile in last year's field and apparently decided the fix was to panic-draft quarterbacks with the zeal of a man who just discovered the position exists. Jordan Love went at 4.01 with an ADP of 7.06, a full 3.4 rounds early, then Bryce Young followed at 8.01, another 3.6 rounds ahead of consensus, leaving roydawg13 holding two backup-tier signal-callers, Love at QB17 and Young at QB26, drafted as if they were cornerstones. The damage those reaches inflicted upstream is plain: Ashton Jeanty, genuinely useful at RB7, was still taken 0.7 rounds before the market, and the receiver room cratered into Michael Wilson at WR39 and Jayden Reed at WR48, with a projected starter pool that bottoms out at J.K. Dobbins at RB36. Zero steals, zero values, twenty draft picks producing nothing but chalk and reaches in every direction, and the team sits 12th in the God of War division. There is no revisionist spin available here. This roster looks exactly like what it is.

There is something quietly exhausting about watching a 96th-percentile season age in real time. ncook4208 went 23-13 last year, scored 5,140 points, and now sits 11th in the God of War division with an 18th-percentile projection, which is the kind of gap that makes you wonder whether last year was a masterpiece or just a good run of variance. The running back group is genuinely strong, Jonathan Taylor at RB4, De'Von Achane at RB6, and Kenneth Walker III at RB10 forming a core that would anchor almost any roster in this field, and the Patrick Mahomes and Rashee Rice stack gives the offense a credible ceiling. But the receiver depth fades fast after Rice, Christian Watson sits at WR28, and Mason Taylor is the only tight end on the roster at TE35. The draft offered no steals and no real values, just 16 chalk picks and a major reach on Jaylin Noel taken nearly three rounds early.

The talent at the top is real. Whether it is enough to close a very wide gap between reputation and reality is the only question that matters here.

There is something quietly exhausting about watching a team spend its 2025 reputation like a gift card from a store that no longer carries the same merchandise. tangkdell finished in the 84th percentile last year, went 23-13, and scored nearly 4,900 points, and this year's roster is sitting 10th in the God of War division with a 21st percentile tournament projection. The bones of a contender are visible: Omarion Hampton at RB9 and Chase Brown at RB11 are legitimate pillars, and Amon-Ra St. Brown at WR4 is the kind of anchor that holds a lineup together when everything else wobbles. But the draft did not create separation. Fifteen chalk picks and two major reaches, including Fernando Mendoza taken more than three rounds before his ADP at QB27, suggest a manager who drafted on familiarity rather than value. Baker Mayfield headlining a weak QB group does not help. The gap between what tangkdell was and what the projections say they are now is real, and hoping Hampton and St. Brown carry the weight of a 64-percent-win memory is a plan, just not necessarily a good one.

bubbabergy enters 2026 ranked ninth in the God of War division and sitting at just the 34th percentile of the field, and there is not much hiding in this roster to suggest a turnaround is coming. The receiver group looks like the foundation of something, with Jaxon Smith-Njigba (WR3), George Pickens (WR10), Chris Olave (WR11), and Garrett Wilson (WR17) all projecting as starters, but that strength gets undercut by a draft board that tells a different story. Of sixteen picks graded as chalk and two flagged as major reaches, the most glaring is Jalen Tolbert (WR102), taken seven full rounds ahead of his ADP, a move that consumed valuable draft capital on a player projected near the bottom of the position. Brock Purdy (QB13) gives the team a functional quarterback anchor, but Sam Darnold (QB21) is a shaky backup plan if Purdy falters. There is no obvious lever left to pull here, and a roster this reliant on things breaking right rarely finds the good fortune it needs.

BrandonTheChamp sits eighth in the God of War division and in the 39th percentile of the field, and the roster makes that ranking feel about right. The foundation is genuinely impressive: Christian McCaffrey, James Cook, Saquon Barkley, and Kyren Williams project as starters, giving this team a collection of top-end talent that most managers would envy. The problem is everything above and below that core. The receiver group grades out weak, with Marvin Harrison Jr. at WR33 and Courtland Sutton at WR37 leading a unit that drops off fast toward Tank Dell at WR74 and Calvin Ridley at WR78. The draft did not help matters: Jaxson Dart was taken 1.3 rounds ahead of his ADP, and Woody Marks was reached on by a staggering three full rounds. That is a lot of draft capital spent on players who may never see a meaningful snap for this team. BrandonTheChamp built a floor, not a ceiling, and in a field this competitive, floors do not win championships.

TE: Tucker Kraft (S) (TE5 | $23 | 5.07), Pat Freiermuth (TE30 | $1 | 14.06)

billybarooooo is the kind of team that makes you squint. Josh Allen at QB1 and Jalen Hurts at QB9 give this roster a genuinely elite ceiling at the position, and Drake London at WR7 adds another top-shelf piece to lean on. The trouble is that everything underneath those names sits right around average, and in a format this deep, average is where seasons quietly dissolve. Bucky Irving at RB21 and Ladd McConkey at WR20 are useful, not decisive. Rhamondre Stevenson, projected at RB31 and the weakest starter on the board, is the kind of player whose good weeks feel like relief and whose bad weeks feel like confirmation. The draft offered almost no deviation from consensus, nineteen chalk picks and one minor value in Kyle Monangai, which means billybarooooo enters 2026 with exactly what the market thought it was getting. Seventh in the division and 58th percentile in the field, this team will not blow anyone out and will not fold easily. The margins decide whether that is a compliment or an epitaph.

TE:

iowafan30 sits 6th in the God of War division and 64th percentile in the field, numbers that look modest until you actually scan the roster. The receiver group is genuinely elite: Ja'Marr Chase at WR2, Nico Collins at WR9, Tetairoa McMillan at WR15, Davante Adams at WR25, and Mike Evans at WR27 all project as starters in a positionless format, and that kind of concentrated firepower at the top is how you win weeks. That talent didn't come cheap or easy. Daniel Jones, taken 2.1 rounds before his ADP, and Aaron Rodgers, taken 2.7 rounds early, are the receipts. Both moves look like reaches on paper, and neither Jones nor Rodgers inspires a ton of confidence as projected starters, Rodgers in particular now 43 years old and searching for an identity with a new Pittsburgh coaching staff alongside Michael Pittman. The honest read is that iowafan30 mortgaged draft capital at quarterback to load up elsewhere, and it paid off spectacularly at receiver. Whether that was a calculated gamble or a happy accident, the receivers don't much care.

Last year was a disaster for pkerrane, a bottom-11-percent scoring performance that left little to celebrate in the God of War division. The 2026 roster looks like a genuine course correction. Drake Maye, projected QB2, was the clearest win of the draft, sliding to pick 2.11 despite an ADP of 2.02, and he pairs with Jayden Daniels, projected QB5, to give pkerrane a quarterback room that most managers would envy. At the top of the lineup, Jahmyr Gibbs projects as RB1 and Harold Fannin and Sam LaPorta project as TE6 and TE8 respectively, meaning pkerrane's best players are legitimately elite, not just serviceable. The receiver group is the one area projecting below average, with Jaylen Waddle at WR23 leading the way, but in a positionless format, the stars at the top of this roster carry real weight. A 72nd-percentile projection and a division rank of fifth do not scream contender, but they scream loudly enough after the year pkerrane just had, and the rebound feels real.

milfan4 didn't win the draft with one flashy pick. They won it by being right, over and over. Lamar Jackson at QB3 slipped past ADP by more than half a round, a quiet gift that anchors the whole operation. Then Malik Nabers, projected WR12, fell a full 1.3 rounds past his ADP, and milfan4 was simply there to take him. Pair those two with Bijan Robinson at RB2 and Jeremiyah Love at RB13, and you have a core that can carry a week on its own. The rest of the roster fills in sensibly: Cam Skattebo projects at RB20, D.J. Moore at WR26, and Jordyn Tyson at WR34, none of them headliners but all of them contributing starters. Fifteen chalk picks and zero major reaches tells you exactly who this manager is, someone who did their homework and refused to panic off script. After a 39 percent win rate in 2025, sitting 72nd percentile entering 2026 looks less like a ceiling and more like a foundation.

BRUCETWAYNE sits third in the God of War division and at the 74th percentile tournament-wide, and the draft record tells you exactly how it happened: 17 chalk picks, one good value, and almost nothing wasted. That kind of disciplined, unspectacular construction is harder to execute than it sounds, and the results speak for themselves. The tight end group anchored by Brock Bowers (TE1) and Colston Loveland (TE3) gives this roster a positional advantage that compounds over a long season. Meanwhile, the receiver corps is quietly loaded, with DeVonta Smith (WR14) headlining a group that will be worth watching closely. Smith spent years as one of the NFL's premier WR2s while AJ Brown commanded top billing in Philadelphia, but Brown is gone now and Smith has the stage to himself. If he steps into that alpha role the way the projections suggest, BRUCETWAYNE's patient, systematic draft starts looking less like a steady hand and more like foresight. Last year's 64 percent win rate confirmed the process works. There is no reason to think 2026 changes that.

There was no lottery-ticket moment in jfluke1008's draft, no swinging-for-the-fences pick that either made or broke the room. What there was, consistently, was a manager who came out ahead of the board. Seventeen chalk picks sounds like a passive strategy until you realize the picks themselves were good ones: Puka Nacua at WR1, A.J. Brown at WR8, and Joe Burrow at QB4 all project as starters, and Burrow arrived a half-round later than his ADP suggested, which counts as found money in any draft. Add projected starters Emeka Egbuka, Jameson Williams, George Kittle, Travis Kelce, and Jake Ferguson to the mix, and the starting lineup writes itself almost every week. The one blemish is Malik Willis, reached nearly two rounds early and projecting as QB24, but in a positionless format Burrow carries that position and Willis is depth insurance at worst. Coming off a 61 percent win rate and a 72nd-percentile scoring season in 2025, jfluke1008 sits second in the God of War division and in the 84th percentile of the field. Steady drafting built this team. Steady winning may be the reward.

Last year was a disaster nobody wants to relive: a 6-30 record, 3,172 points, and a landing spot in the first percentile of scoring. The 2026 version of Hfdwhalers looks like a genuinely different team. Justin Jefferson at WR6 and Trey McBride at TE2 are the kind of cornerstones that anchor a real contender, and the manager didn't stop there, stacking Tyler Warren at TE4 and Isaiah Likely at TE13 alongside McBride to build a positional group that projects as one of the strongest in the field. Derrick Henry at RB12 and Quinshon Judkins at RB22 give this roster legitimate punch in the backfield. The quarterback situation is the one place where the ceiling gets trimmed, with Jared Goff at QB16 and Kyler Murray at QB19 projecting as the weakest part of the lineup, though the Murray-Jefferson stack adds some connective upside. The result is an 86th-percentile projection and a first-place standing in the God of War division. One bad year doesn't define a manager. This one answered back.
