TE: Isaiah Likely (S) (TE13 | $7 | 10.01)

There is no spin available for jordanvanek, and frankly there is no energy left to attempt one. The 2026 roster sits at 12th in the Halo 3 division and the 6th percentile of the field, which tracks almost perfectly with a draft that logged zero steals, four major reaches, and zero picks that fell past ADP except Isaiah Likely. The reach on Chris Brazzell II tells the whole story: taken 7.6 rounds before his ADP, Brazzell sits as a projected WR101, meaning jordanvanek spent a premium pick on a player who ranks below every other receiver on this roster. Justin Jefferson and Drake London are legitimate, and a Jared Goff and Jameson Williams stack at least has internal logic, but the supporting cast was assembled like someone panicked every time the clock ran low. Last season's 7th-percentile scoring output was not a fluke. It was a preview. Nothing in how this draft unfolded suggests 2026 will read any differently.

PhillyDizzle sits 11th in the Halo 3 division and in just the 7th percentile of the entire field, and the roster does not offer much reason for optimism. The top of the lineup is genuinely strong, Colston Loveland projects as TE3 and De'Von Achane grades out as RB6, but the draft board tells a troubling story about how the rest of the roster got filled in. Three major reaches dot the sheet, and two of them are wide receivers. Makai Lemon cost five rounds of premium capital to land a WR40, and KC Concepcion was taken nearly four rounds early for a WR50 whose path to production runs through Cleveland's unresolved quarterback situation. If Deshaun Watson or Shedeur Sanders is your signal-caller, you are not exactly flooding your receivers with opportunity. PhillyDizzle has a ceiling held up by Loveland and Achane, but the floor is built on overpaid depth, and in a positionless format where every roster spot competes for your lineup, paying up three and four rounds early for your WR40 and WR50 is the kind of math that does not improve with optimism.

Slapdash13 drafted with genuine patience. Jordan Love came two full rounds after his ADP, Terry McLaurin was the lone significant overpay, and the rest of the board filled out at or near consensus value. That discipline earns a grade. The roster itself earns a 32nd-percentile projection and a tenth-place divisional ranking, which is the part that stings. The receiver group is legitimately impressive, Jaxon Smith-Njigba at WR3, Nico Collins at WR9, and DeVonta Smith entering 2026 as the clear alpha in Philadelphia after years of sharing targets with A.J. Brown, all projecting as starters. The problem is that good value on receivers you were already going to need is not actually a surplus. It is just paying fair price for what the roster required. And when Love checks in at QB17, Juwan Johnson anchors the tight end projections at TE20, and the running back group is headlined by Kyle Monangai at RB33, there is no cavalry coming. Slapdash13 played the draft correctly and arrived at a mediocre team anyway, which is somehow worse than simply reaching for the wrong players.

joshuacalhoun enters 2026 sitting ninth in the Halo 3 division and in just the 41st percentile of the field, and the roster makes it hard to envision a dramatic reversal. The receiver group is genuinely impressive on paper, headlined by Puka Nacua at WR1 and Malik Nabers at WR12, with Jaylen Waddle projecting as a WR23 after relocating from Miami's dysfunction to a Denver offense that led the league in pass attempts last year. That is real talent. The problem is that everything above the receiver line starts to thin out fast. The backfield grades out weak, with the best back Tyjae Spears projecting as RB47, and the projected weak link among the starters is Jalen Coker at WR55. Lamar Jackson at QB3 is the kind of asset that can paper over roster flaws, but with six minor reaches and a major reach on Nabers clouding the draft ledger, joshuacalhoun spent bullets early and still landed in the bottom third of the division. There is no obvious lever left to pull here.

TE: Tyler Warren (S) (TE4 | $31 | 4.04), Greg Dulcich (TE25 | $2 | 14.04)

MrSwanThom drafted with genuine discipline, taking Jaxson Dart two full rounds after his ADP and landing Tyler Warren a round late, and the patience shows up clearly in the final tallies: 2 steals, 3 values, 12 chalk, and almost nothing thrown away. The problem is that discipline bought a roster that projects 8th in the Halo 3 division and sits at the 44th percentile of the field, which is exactly the kind of outcome that makes process-based thinking feel hollow. The receiver group is legitimately impressive, with Amon-Ra St. Brown at WR4, George Pickens at WR10, and Chris Olave at WR11 all projecting as starters, but a format where managers field their best ten players regardless of position means that depth only matters if those players actually outscore the field, and this roster coming off a 40th-percentile scoring season in 2025 offers little reason for optimism. MrSwanThom did the homework and got reasonable grades on every test. The final exam just handed back a C, anyway.

pohebert is not hedging. This is a roster built around a single idea: Joe Burrow throws to Ja'Marr Chase, and when that happens at full volume, everything else is noise. Burrow projects as QB4 and Chase as WR2, and the stack sits at the center of this team like a load-bearing wall. Pull it out and you are left with a pleasant collection of names; keep it standing and the ceiling climbs fast. Rashee Rice at WR13 and Rome Odunze at WR30 add correlated upside of their own, meaning pohebert is not just praying for one game to go sideways in the right direction, they are structured to absorb multiple hits on the same Sunday. Last season's 94th-percentile scoring suggests the manager knows how to build a team that actually scores, not just one that looks good in previews. The risk is real, Burrow at his worst is not QB4, and a down week from Chase is a down week for the whole team. That is the trade pohebert made, and it is the only bet worth making if your goal is to win the thing outright.

PeakedInHighSkool finished in the 84th percentile in scoring last season and sits at 53rd percentile entering 2026, which tells you everything about where this team lives: capable enough to beat most rosters on any given week, not dangerous enough to make anyone nervous in a tough matchup. The margins here are thin, and the roster reflects that precisely. CeeDee Lamb at WR5 is a genuine difference-maker, and the Dak Prescott stack gives that pairing real upside when Dallas is cooking. James Cook at RB5 and Kyle Pitts at TE7 round out a starting core that quietly competes. The concern is whether the depth can hold when it matters. Josh Jacobs, grabbed two rounds past his ADP, was smart drafting, but RJ Harvey projects as the weakest projected starter at RB28, and in a format where every point counts, that starter slot is the place opponents will find their margin. This team does not win big or lose ugly. It grinds, it competes, and it probably finishes right where the projections say it will.

Quinnifer didn't chase the flashy move, just kept finding the right player at the right price, and the cumulative effect is a roster that sits comfortably in the top half of the field. The clearest example is the quarterback room, where Drake Maye, a projected QB2, fell nearly a full round past his ADP, and Jayden Daniels, a projected QB5, fell almost two rounds before Quinnifer scooped him up. Getting that kind of production value at that position twice in the same draft is the kind of quiet damage that separates good drafters from great ones. The running back group anchors everything, with Bijan Robinson projecting as RB2 and a supporting cast that includes Travis Etienne, Cam Skattebo, and David Montgomery all projected as starters. Alec Pierce is worth watching as a late addition to the receiver group, but his status coming off ankle surgery and a potential PUP situation adds some uncertainty to his Week 1 availability. This team doesn't have a signature moment from draft day, just round after round of sensible, forward-leaning decisions that quietly built something real.

SCDoubleJ didn't build this roster on one flashy swing. They built it pick by pick, and the cumulative effect is a team that belongs in the 2026 conversation. The headliner is Christian McCaffrey at RB3, but what makes the roster work is the depth behind him: Ashton Jeanty at RB7 and Kenneth Walker III at RB10 give this team a top-end running game that most managers would mortgage the back half of their draft to assemble. The back half, meanwhile, is where SCDoubleJ pulled away. Caleb Williams fell to 5.10 despite projecting as QB6, a gift that more than compensated for any late-round noise. The draft profile shows 11 chalk picks alongside only one major reach in Ray Davis, which is another way of saying this manager rarely paid above market and occasionally cashed in well below it. The 2025 track record, a 96th-percentile scoring season, suggests this is not a team that stumbles onto good rosters by accident. Fourth in the division is the current projection, but the construction says ceiling is real.

lawmjp lands at 74th percentile and third in the division, which is a fine place to be, and the route there was anything but conventional. Six picks landed before their ADP, three of them by nearly three rounds, and yet the roster that emerged from all that aggressive triggering is genuinely difficult to argue with. Brock Bowers at TE1 anchors everything, a projectable alpha in a positionless format where elite tight end production compounds week over week. A.J. Brown at WR8 and Garrett Wilson at WR17 give the lineup a legitimate one-two punch at the top, and Justin Herbert at QB8 arrived as one of only two true values on the draft sheet, sliding more than a round and a half past his ADP. The reaches are real, Ryan Flourney at WR69 and Evan Engram at TE36 both cost meaningful draft capital ahead of schedule, but those picks exist at the roster's edges, not its spine. lawmjp bet on itself repeatedly and built something worth betting on. Whether that reflects rare conviction or impeccable timing, the standings will eventually settle the argument.

FantasyLoko finished last season at 31-5 with a 100th percentile scoring mark, and the 2026 draft suggests nothing has changed about how this manager operates. Six values landed across the roster, zero reaches, and the execution was precise enough to make other managers feel bad about their own boards. Jonathan Taylor at RB4 came in at 2.05 when his ADP was 2.01, essentially market price, but Javonte Williams fell a full 1.2 rounds before FantasyLoko picked him up at RB17, and Dallas Goedert slid 1.2 rounds past his ADP before getting scooped at TE15. That is disciplined patience, not luck. Trey McBride at TE2 anchors the tight end room alongside Goedert, and the backfield depth behind Taylor includes Chase Brown at RB11, Derrick Henry at RB12, and Kyren Williams at RB15, all projected starters. Even the Kyler Murray situation, fragile as it looks on paper, costs nothing if McCarthy wins the job outright. This roster is 85th percentile in the field, second in the division, and built to stay there.

Last year was genuinely ugly for awake1188, a bottom-8-percent scoring disaster that left little room for optimism. The 2026 roster reads like a direct and emphatic response. The foundation starts with Josh Allen, the QB1, landed at pick 2.08 against an ADP of 1.05, a full round and change of free value on the best quarterback in fantasy. Pair Allen with Jahmyr Gibbs at RB1 and Saquon Barkley at RB8, and you have a trio of projected starters who could carry a roster on their own, even accounting for the whispers that Philadelphia may start managing Barkley's workload more carefully now that he is 29. The receiver group is average by projection, with Tee Higgins at WR19 and Davante Adams at WR25 anchoring things, but in a positionless format the elite top end is what separates contenders from pretenders. This roster sits first in the Halo 3 division and in the 98th percentile of the field. The rebound is not coming. It is already here.
