Seven major reaches in a single draft is not a rough patch, it is a philosophy, and Brazzell Dazzle has committed to it fully. The most defensible of the bunch is Drake Maye, taken at 1.03 despite an ADP of 2.02, and honestly the case for Maye is real: the Patriots added AJ Brown in the offseason, and a QB2 with a genuine alpha receiver for the first time is a reasonable first-round anchor. The problem is that reasonable decision arrives surrounded by wreckage. Malik Willis comes in at QB24 despite being drafted two full rounds early, Mac Jones checks in at QB39 after being reached on by eight rounds, and the back end of the receiver group features Chris Brazzell II at WR101 and Elic Ayomanor at WR95, both taken nearly five rounds ahead of where the market valued them. The lone bright spots, Jordyn Tyson and KC Concepcion, are genuine values, but they are projected at WR34 and WR50 respectively and cannot carry a roster that is sitting fourth percentile in the field. The draft had answers. Brazzell Dazzle asked different questions entirely.

TE:

JoeCistaro enters 2026 sitting 11th in the Kratos division and in just the 12th percentile of the field, and the draft record offers little reason for optimism. Three major reaches dot the board, including Jaxson Dart gobbled up nearly three full rounds ahead of his ADP and Rico Dowdle taken almost three rounds early, and the cumulative effect is a roster that paid premium prices for mid-tier returns. The lone genuine anchor is Josh Allen, a QB1 who can carry a week by himself, and a stack with D.J. Moore at WR26 gives that pairing some upside. But after Allen, the drop is steep and real: Rhamondre Stevenson projects as the weakest projected starter, and last year's 10-26 record with a 25th-percentile scoring output suggests this is not a team that tends to outperform its talent. Chris Olave was the one notable value, but a single well-timed find does not rehabilitate a draft that otherwise traded future flexibility for names JoeCistaro clearly wanted more than the market did. The lever has already been pulled, and it didn't budge.

Last year, CaioBRFF finished in the 92nd percentile, and the 2026 roster reads like a team that has been quietly hollowed out since. The projected ranking sits at the 15th percentile, which is not a slump so much as a different team wearing the same jersey. The draft tells part of the story: three major reaches, including Jordan Love at QB17 taken 2.5 rounds early and Sam Darnold at QB21 taken 2.2 rounds early, burning premium capital on quarterbacks who project as middling starters at best. Brock Bowers at TE1, Harold Fannin at TE6, George Kittle at TE9, and Travis Kelce at TE10 give the roster a genuinely elite tier, and Drake London at WR7 anchors the receiver group with real upside. But the drop-off from those names to the rest of the projected starters is steep, and the weakest projected starter is Jordan Addison at WR43. Whatever CaioBRFF was in 2025, the projection says that version is gone, and the Kratos division will have little patience for nostalgia.

TE: Juwan Johnson (TE20 | $4 | 12.03)

DoubleDizzle enters 2026 sitting ninth in the Kratos division and hovering right around the 45th percentile of the field, which is a polite way of saying this roster is in trouble without an obvious path out. The foundation looks appealing on the surface, Lamar Jackson at QB3 and Saquon Barkley at RB8 are legitimate cornerstones, but the draft process did this team no favors. Jayden Daniels was taken 1.2 rounds ahead of his ADP, a major reach at the first overall pick that cost real equity at the most critical moment of the draft. The receiver group compounds the problem. Tee Higgins at WR19 and Terry McLaurin at WR24 are serviceable starters, but behind them the projections fall off a cliff, with Travis Hunter checking in at WR62 and nothing credible beyond that. The Daniels and McLaurin stack is a fine consolation, but stacks win weeks, not seasons. When your clearest path to optimism is a discount on Juwan Johnson in round 12, you are not pulling levers anymore, you are just hoping the floor holds.

JordanCruz2 enters 2026 sitting eighth in the Kratos division, and the roster tells you exactly why. The running back group is legitimately exciting, with Jahmyr Gibbs (RB1) and Jonathan Taylor (RB4) anchoring a backfield that can carry a week on its own, and Kyren Williams (RB15) offering real depth behind them. The problem is the draft strategy that built this team, which read less like a plan and more like a hostage negotiation with ADP. Patrick Mahomes (QB12) cost a third-round pick and Brock Purdy (QB13) cost a fourth, meaning JordanCruz2 spent two premium selections on a position pairing that projects as merely above average. Spend that capital in rounds three and four on skill players and this conversation looks different. Instead, the receiver corps grades out average at best, Rashee Rice (WR13) and Mike Evans (WR27) are the clear standouts, and the ceiling drops fast from there. With four major reaches scattered across the board and no obvious high-upside correction available, the path forward is murky.

TE: Jake Ferguson (S) (TE12 $8 8.08), T.J. Hockenson (TE23 $2 12.08)

HouseStarkWins sits at the 51st percentile, which is another way of saying the season hinges entirely on the thin margins between good and almost good. The top of this roster is genuinely dangerous: Ja'Marr Chase (WR2) and Nico Collins (WR9) give the team a receiver ceiling most managers would envy, and the Caleb Williams / Luther Burden stack adds a bonus layer that can spike a week when everything clicks. The problem is that the projected weakest starter, C.J. Stroud, was taken three full rounds ahead of his ADP, and Stroud has spent the last couple of seasons slowly dismantling the goodwill from his explosive 2024. The excuses are real, the offensive line concerns are real, the Collins injury history is real, but a QB22 projection taken at a QB6 price is the kind of miscalculation that lives in the margins, and the margins are exactly where this season gets decided. Chase and Collins can carry weeks. Stroud, as currently projected, cannot save them.

TE: Isaiah Likely (S) (TE13 | $7 | 10.02)

KBob32 is the team that lives and dies in the margins, and the roster reflects exactly that. The receiver group is genuinely dangerous at the top, with Amon-Ra St. Brown at WR4 and CeeDee Lamb at WR5 forming a pairing that most managers in the Kratos division cannot match, and Tetairoa McMillan at WR15 and Garrett Wilson at WR17 giving real depth behind them. That ceiling is real. But a 6-30 record and a tenth-percentile finish in 2025 is the kind of history that demands more than a strong top end, and the rest of this roster is built on averages: D'Andre Swift at RB24, Isaiah Likely at TE13, Trevor Lawrence at QB10. None of those are weaknesses exactly, but none of them are the tiebreakers that push a 54th-percentile team into contention. KBob32 drafted chalk almost across the board, with values on Wilson and Likely but no real steals to speak of. If the stars perform at projection, this is a fringe playoff team. If anything slips, the margin evaporates fast.

SFB8 Champ sits at 59th percentile and fifth in the Kratos division, which sounds pedestrian until you look at how they got there: four minor reaches, one major reach, and exactly zero steals across the entire draft. By the board's logic, this team overpaid at almost every turn. By the roster's logic, it doesn't much matter. Jalen Hurts at QB9 anchors things at quarterback, Trey McBride at TE2 is a genuine difference-maker at a position where scarcity compounds weekly, and the combination of Derrick Henry at RB12, A.J. Brown at WR8, and Josh Jacobs at RB16 gives this manager a starting core that most Kratos rivals would trade for on the spot, though Jacobs comes with an asterisk that has nothing to do with projections and everything to do with an unresolved off-field situation that could scramble his season before it starts. The Daniel Jones reach at 2.8 rounds early is the one moment where conviction looks suspiciously like hope. Everything else suggests a manager who knew exactly what they wanted and just refused to wait around for it.

Willy86 doesn't look like a reach-happy drafter on paper, they look like a manager who trusted their board and got paid for it. Consider the evidence: Jacoby Brissett taken 2.4 rounds early, Justin Fields grabbed nearly four rounds ahead of consensus, Tyler Allgeier plucked two rounds before the market caught up. By the numbers, this draft looks aggressive to the point of recklessness. By the roster, it looks like a plan. Bijan Robinson at RB2 and James Cook at RB5 give Willy86 a backfield that would make any manager in the Kratos division uncomfortable, and a wide receiving corps anchored by Zay Flowers (WR16), Ladd McConkey (WR20), and Davante Adams (WR25) means the scoring floor stays high even when the top guys rest. The Herbert-McConkey stack adds a ceiling kicker if Justin Herbert finds a groove. Last season's 76th-percentile scoring output and 78 percent win rate suggest this manager already knows how to convert a roster into results. The reaches may have looked panicked in the moment. The 70th-percentile standing says they weren't.

TommyTargaryen lands at third in the division and the 85th percentile of the field, and the case for this team begins and ends with what it assembled at the positions that matter most. Joe Burrow at QB4 is a franchise-level anchor. Christian McCaffrey at RB3 and Kenneth Walker III at RB10 give this roster two projected starters who would headline most rosters on their own. Then add Tyler Warren at TE4 and Kyle Pitts at TE7, and the picture becomes almost unfair: three of the top eight tight ends alive, all projected starters, all accumulated in a format where you simply field your best players and let the talent sort itself out. The draft had its imperfections, a 3.6-round early grab on Chris Bell and a 2.7-round reach on Ray Davis, but the top of this roster renders those footnotes. In a tournament where peak talent wins weeks, TommyTargaryen built a core that can go toe to toe with anyone, and that concentration of elite production at QB, RB, and TE is the whole argument.

After finishing in the 11th percentile in 2026 scoring, schardt312 is done apologizing. This roster lands in the 90th percentile of the field and sits second in the Kratos division, and the engine driving that climb is a receiver and tight end group that borders on unfair. Puka Nacua (WR1), Justin Jefferson (WR6), and Malik Nabers (WR12) are all projected starters, and schardt312 landed every one of them past their ADP, with Nabers falling nearly two full rounds. The tight end depth compounds the advantage: Colston Loveland (TE3) and Tucker Kraft (TE5) were both drafted at a discount, giving this team a pair of elite options at a position where most managers are scrambling for one. The one honest blemish is at quarterback, where Bo Nix (QB15) and Bryce Young (QB26) were both taken well ahead of consensus, with Young arriving a jarring 4.1 rounds early. In a positionless format, the quarterback cost matters less than it would elsewhere, and the talent stacked everywhere else makes schardt312 a genuine rebound story worth watching.

bwshuez didn't need a moonshot to land at the top of the Kratos division and in the 91st percentile of the field. This roster was built pick by pick, round by round, with a quiet efficiency that is easy to miss until you look at the results. Six value picks and zero major reaches tells the story: a manager who consistently let the board come to them. De'Von Achane at RB6 and Ashton Jeanty at RB7 form a backfield core that most teams would mortgage their draft to acquire, and Jeanty alone was a gift, sliding a full round past his ADP before bwshuez claimed him at 3.09. Meanwhile, Jaxon Smith-Njigba projects as WR3 and DeVonta Smith as WR14, with Smith himself falling nearly a round and a half before getting scooped up at 5.09. There is no single flashy moment to point to here, no gamble that paid off. Just a draft that kept winning the small edges, and a roster that looks every bit like a legitimate title threat because of it.
