There is no flattering spin available for GereonA, a team sitting at the bottom of the Claptrap division and in the 4th percentile of the entire field, and the draft board tells you exactly why. The reach column is doing a lot of work here, and not the good kind: Cam Skattebo, a projectable RB20, was hauled in nearly three full rounds ahead of his ADP, and then the back end of the draft turned into a panic room, with Ja'Kobi Lane (WR89) and Chimere Dike (WR84) each yanked five-plus rounds early to fill out a receiver depth chart that still bottoms out at WR84 and WR89. Those are not reclamation projects, those are draft capital set on fire. Meanwhile, the one time the board actually delivered value, Fernando Mendoza tumbling to a late-round pick, GereonA was already committed to Jaxson Dart, leaving Mendoza to collect dust as a QB27 on a roster that desperately needed something, anywhere, to go right. This team drafted urgently and got nothing for the anxiety.

TE: Cade Otton (TE27 | $2 | 13.05), Darnell Washington (TE38 | $0 | 19.05)

There is no charitable read available for TWoodPeckers, a team sitting 11th in the Claptrap division and in just the 4th percentile of the entire field, and the draft tells you exactly why. The most damning evidence is in rounds seven through nine, where this roster spent three consecutive picks on Khalil Shakir (WR51), Josh Downs (WR46), and Jalen Coker (WR55), each pulled between 2.9 and 3.2 rounds ahead of their respective ADPs, burning mid-draft capital on players who rank in the fifties on the depth chart while leaving the rest of the roster to fend for itself. Ja'Marr Chase (WR2) is a genuine anchor and the kind of player who earns his draft slot, but he was surrounded by a manager who seemingly panicked and hoarded receivers at the expense of everything else. The quarterback situation is quietly catastrophic: Brock Purdy (QB13) and Bryce Young (QB26) are the options, with Young, who was the team's lone draft value, projecting as the weakest starter on the entire roster. That is a grim sentence to have to write, and yet here we are.

Titan1286 sits 10th in the Claptrap division and in just the 15th percentile of the entire field, and the draft record offers little reason for optimism. The team landed four major reaches, including Wan'Dale Robinson at WR47, taken 2.5 rounds ahead of his ADP and projected to be the weakest starter on the roster. Kyren Williams came off the board 1.7 rounds early at RB15, and A.J. Brown was grabbed nearly a full round before the market caught up. There are genuine assets here, Drake London at WR7 and Brown at WR8 give the lineup real top-end receiver pop, and Jayden Daniels at QB5 is a legitimate anchor, but the supporting cast grades out thin enough that one injury to any of those names probably ends the season before it starts. Jordan Love fell nearly three full rounds past his ADP, which counts as the draft's one clean win, but a QB17 as the organizational value play is not the kind of lever that moves a team from the bottom of the standings into contention. The math just does not pencil out from here.

Aggie94 sits ninth in the Claptrap division and in just the 18th percentile of the field, and the draft record does not offer much hope for a turnaround. The headline problem is a draft board that leaned on reaches: Jameson Williams at WR21 cost two full rounds of surplus value, Jaydon Blue at RB70 burned nearly eight rounds of equity, and neither projection screams "steal." Brock Bowers at TE1 and Nico Collins at WR9 are genuine building blocks, and Dak Prescott falling to 4.12 for a QB7 projection is the kind of windfall that keeps a roster competitive, but the bottom of this lineup is where ambitions go to die. J.K. Dobbins is the projected weakest starter at RB36, and the depth behind him offers little cushion. Aggie94 finished 58th percentile in scoring last season, so this is not a team in free fall, but the gap between the ceiling and the floor feels narrower this year, and the draft did not produce the surplus capital needed to close it.

theMB7 sits at 23rd percentile and eighth in the Claptrap division, and the roster grades out in a way that makes it genuinely difficult to identify the turnaround. Josh Allen is a QB1 and Patrick Mahomes is a solid stack partner alongside Rashee Rice, so the passing game has real teeth. But beyond that anchor, the drop-off is persistent. Ashton Jeanty is the only skill-position starter who clears a top-10 projection, and projected starters like Michael Pittman at WR44 and Oronde Gadsden at TE16 represent the kind of middling production that quietly bleeds a team out over a long season. Gadsden's situation got murkier when the Chargers signed David Njoku in the offseason, introducing a veteran target-thief into what had been a clear role. The draft itself offered no real rescue: 11 chalk picks and zero steals, with four minor reaches suggesting a manager who paid slightly above market and got slightly below expectation. When your ceiling is dependent on everything breaking right and your floor has no obvious floor, that is not a formula for a deep tournament run.

TE: Juwan Johnson (TE20 | $4 | 12.07), Theo Johnson (TE37 | $0 | 14.07)

Me94 is the team that wins or loses based on inches, and those inches run in both directions. The receiver group is legitimately dangerous: Jaxon Smith-Njigba at WR3, George Pickens at WR10, Tetairoa McMillan at WR15, and Emeka Egbuka at WR18 give this roster a ceiling that most managers in the Claptrap division would trade for without blinking. That is the good news. The uncomfortable news is that the same draft produced Theo Johnson at TE37 as a major reach, three and a half rounds ahead of consensus, which is the kind of capital misfire that quietly haunts a team living at the 46th percentile. The Baker Mayfield and Egbuka stack adds a nice points-per-game floor on the right week, but Mayfield projects as QB18, and in a positionless format where every point is in direct competition with every other point on the roster, that ceiling has a very specific height. Nothing here collapses into last place. Nothing here terrifies the division leader either. Me94 is a team where the margins decide everything, and the margins are not yet decided.

TE: Dalton Schultz (TE22 | $3 | 12.01), Michael Mayer (TE39 | $0 | 19.12)

Svensson1 sits at the tournament's exact midpoint, and that is not a coincidence, it is a portrait. The top of this roster is genuinely good: CeeDee Lamb at WR5 and James Cook at RB5 are the kind of projected starters that keep a manager competitive in any given week, and the Caleb Williams/Luther Burden stack adds a ceiling that most 50th-percentile rosters simply cannot access. But the margins tighten fast after that. Jadarian Price projects as the weakest projected starter at RB26, which means the floor on a bad week is real. The Tyler Shough/Chris Olave stack is the wildcard worth watching: Shough looked polished in his first season, and Olave is a genuine difference-maker when healthy, but asking a 27-year-old to make a Year 2 leap is a question mark, not a given. The draft was almost entirely chalk, which tells you Svensson1 built this roster correctly without finding an edge. Correct and edgeless is fine in September. In a tight division race, it tends to be the thing you wish you had fixed.

Yufgoi5 sits at 67th percentile in the field and fifth in the Claptrap division, which sounds middling until you look at what they actually built. The draft sheet reads like a series of mistakes: Brian Thomas Jr. pulled two-plus rounds ahead of his ADP, Eli Stowers nearly three rounds early, Sean Tucker more than four. And yet the roster that came out the other side projects a RB1 in Jahmyr Gibbs, a TE3 in Colston Loveland, and a QB3 in Lamar Jackson who somehow qualified as the biggest value on the board. That last detail is worth sitting with. Jackson fell almost a full round past ADP and still landed as a top-three quarterback. The reaches, meanwhile, produced Brian Thomas Jr. as a projected starter alongside Trevor Lawrence, whose career year last season coincided with Thomas having a quietly disappointing campaign, leaving real questions about whether those two will ever click the way the draft capital demands. Conviction or luck, the core here is genuinely good. The margins will be decided by which version of the reaches shows up.

Patriots Cologne didn't chase the flashy pick or swing for the fences on one marquee name. They just kept coming out ahead. Joe Burrow at QB4 slid to pick 2.10 when his average draft position had him going five spots earlier, a minor gift the manager pocketed without drama. Justin Herbert fell a full round and a half, landing at QB8 for a price that would have looked like a bargain on any other team's board. The crown jewel, though, is Jake Ferguson: a TE12 projection who fell nearly three rounds past his ADP before Patriots Cologne scooped him at 11.03. That kind of patience, or luck, rarely comes twice in a draft. Meanwhile, Jaylen Waddle, projected WR23, upgrades from one of the more dysfunctional passing offenses in recent memory to a Denver offense where Bo Nix threw the ball more than anyone in the league last year. The roster lands at 70th percentile in the field, fourth in the Claptrap division, and it got there the unglamorous way: round after round of quiet, consistent wins at the board.

TE: Tyler Warren (S) (TE4 | $31 | 3.04), Tucker Kraft (S) (TE5 | $23 | 5.04)

Dommek didn't need a lottery ticket to build this roster, just a draft that kept cashing small wins until the pile got impressive. Jonathan Taylor at RB4 slid to 2.09 when his ADP suggested he should have been gone rounds earlier, and Dommek was right there to collect. Chase Brown at RB11 and Quinshon Judkins at RB22 followed the same pattern, each falling past their expected range into Dommek's waiting hands. Add Tyler Warren at TE4 and Tucker Kraft at TE5, a pair of tight ends who project as genuine starters, and Kraft coming off an ACL recovery into a Packers offense that lost more receivers than it gained, making his path back to a starring role look cleaner than the injury history implies. Stack Puka Nacua at WR1 on top of all that and the picture sharpens considerably. This roster landed at 89th percentile in the field and third in the division not because of one audacious swing but because nearly everything Dommek touched in that draft came back with a little extra attached.

gardoffl sits second in the Claptrap division and in the 97th percentile of the entire field, and the draft sheet explains exactly why. This is a clean operation: eight values and one steal across the roster, zero reaches, and key contributors taken well after their average draft positions. Christian McCaffrey at RB3 slid half a round past his ADP and landed at 2.03, which is the kind of quiet fortune that compounds quickly when paired with Derrick Henry at RB12 and Trey McBride at TE2. Meanwhile, Tee Higgins fell a full round to 5.10, Davante Adams went a round and a half late, and Courtland Sutton slipped past his number too, so the value was not a one-time thing, it was a pattern. C.J. Stroud at QB22 dropped more than two rounds and provides real upside as a starter option behind Sam Darnold. There is nothing here that looks like a panic pick or a reach, and at 97th percentile, the results speak plainly. gardoffl drafted with patience and left the board looking like someone else's problem.

Mar8Te3 sits atop the Claptrap division and ranks in the 99th tournament percentile, and the draft sheet tells you exactly why. The value capture here is surgical: Kenneth Walker III, projected RB10 and a projected starter, fell more than two rounds past his ADP before Mar8Te3 scooped him in round five. TreVeyon Henderson, projected RB19 and also a projected starter, slipped more than three rounds and landed in round ten. Those two picks alone represent the kind of draft discipline that separates managers who understand the board from managers who just fill slots. Saquon Barkley at RB8 and Breece Hall at RB14 round out a backfield that projects as one of the most dangerous in the field, while George Kittle at TE9 and Travis Kelce at TE10 give the lineup a ridiculous ceiling at tight end. Four steals, two values, and zero minor reaches on a 19-round board is not luck, it is process. Ted Hurst is the one blemish, taken more than three rounds early, but one reach on an otherwise spotless sheet is the cost of doing business this well.
