There is no spin available for brodiebee, who lands third in the Lego Star Wars: The Skywalker Saga division and in the third percentile of the entire field, and the draft record explains exactly why. The team posted zero steals and zero values across the entire board, five major reaches, and not a single moment where the manager got the better of the house. The reaches were not subtle. Dontayvion Wicks, a WR96, was taken nearly six rounds before his ADP. Kaelon Black, a RB71, went eight full rounds early. Cam Ward, projecting as a QB23, was drafted in the seventh round when the field waited until the tenth to go there. These were not calculated gambles on upside; they were the draft equivalent of overpaying for furniture at full retail and then losing the receipt. The projected starter floor reflects it, with Matthew Golden sitting as the WR52 and the weakest starter on a team that needed late-round gifts to bail out the early mistakes. None arrived. brodiebee built this roster with urgency and got none of the reward that urgency is supposed to buy.

TE:

There is no gentle way to say this about oilime: sitting 11th in the Lego Star Wars: The Skywalker Saga division and projected at just the 22nd percentile of the field, this roster is in genuine trouble, and the draft did not do much to hide it. The receiver group is the clearest symptom, with Davante Adams at WR25 leading a unit that drops off quickly to Michael Wilson at WR39 and Jakobi Meyers at WR45 as the projected weakest starter. The ground game is legitimately good, Christian McCaffrey at RB3 and James Cook at RB5 giving the team a real foundation, but the rest of the roster cannot hold the structure up. Worse, the draft suggests the manager sensed the problem and tried to patch it with hope rather than value, reaching 5.4 rounds early for Tyreek Hill, now projected WR77, and 3.1 rounds early for Shedeur Sanders at QB32. Those are the kinds of swings that look bold in April and look like debt in September. With 16 chalk picks and zero steals, oilime had little margin for error and used what margin existed poorly.

There is not much good news to deliver about pwindynasty in 2026, and the data does not leave much room to spin it. Sitting tenth in the Lego Star Wars: The Skywalker Saga division and projecting at just the 29th percentile of the field, this roster is in the kind of hole where even the bright spots come with asterisks. Trey McBride at TE2 and Malik Nabers at WR12 are genuine assets, but pwindynasty paid early for Nabers, reaching 1.2 rounds ahead of ADP at pick 2.08, and the roster around those two does not hold up. Daniel Jones and Kirk Cousins project at QB25 and QB35 respectively, and neither one is a path to winning weeks outright. The draft was almost entirely chalk, with 15 of 20 picks landing right at market value, which means there is no hidden upside baked in, no late-round gamble quietly waiting to pay off. What you see is what you get, and what you get projects to land near the bottom. That is a hard place to start.

GoingFor2DotCom did not stumble into correlation by accident. This roster was built around it, which means the ceiling is real and the risk is equally real. The centerpiece pairing is Dak Prescott (QB7) and CeeDee Lamb (WR5), a stack that needs no explanation and even less convincing. The more interesting bet is the second one: Kyler Murray (QB19) and Justin Jefferson (WR6), a pairing that reads like a calculated gamble on a narrative still being written. Jefferson's WR6 projection implies the market believes his 2025 struggles were a McCarthy problem, not a Jefferson problem, and Murray arriving in Minnesota as the favorite to start is exactly the kind of quarterback upgrade that makes that bet worth taking. If both stacks fire in the same week, this roster can beat anyone in the field. If neither does, sitting ninth in the Lego Star Wars: The Skywalker Saga division at the 32nd percentile starts to feel less like a preview and more like a warning. The plan is sound. The plan just needs to work.

WarElephantss sits eighth in the Lego Star Wars: The Skywalker Saga division and projects at just the 38th percentile of the field, and the roster construction explains why. The receiver group is genuinely elite, headlined by Ja'Marr Chase (WR2) and supported by DeVonta Smith (WR14), Zay Flowers (WR16), and Rome Odunze (WR30), and Tyler Warren (TE4) and Harold Fannin (TE6) give the team real punch at tight end. The problem is that Chase and company cannot carry the whole load when the rest of the projected starters grade out as thin as they do here, and Bo Nix at QB15 is a ceiling, not a floor. The draft did nothing to change the math, producing zero steals and zero values against fourteen chalk selections and a notable early commitment to Fannin, taken more than two rounds before his ADP. When your weakest projected starter is Wan'Dale Robinson at WR47, the margin for error is already gone, and this roster offers no obvious move left to close the gap.

Jefferson1923 is the kind of team that wins its way to .500 and then stares at the playoff line for six weeks wondering which side it ends up on. The ceiling lives at receiver, where Jaxon Smith-Njigba at WR3 and A.J. Brown at WR8 form a genuinely dangerous top end, and Ladd McConkey at WR20 stays useful through a Justin Herbert stack that gives the whole unit a little connective tissue. Brown was a minor reach at 2.05, but paying a half-round premium for a WR8 is not the problem here. The problem is what happens when the lineup needs a fourth contributor and the answer is Jordan Mason at RB41, the projected weakest starter on the roster. Cam Skattebo at RB20 arrived as a value, falling more than a round past his ADP, and Travis Kelce at TE10 still does what Kelce does, but this roster has almost no margin for injury or underperformance among its starters before the math gets uncomfortable. Seventh in the Lego Star Wars: The Skywalker Saga division and sitting at the 45th percentile, Jefferson1923 is not a disaster waiting to happen, it is a coin flip waiting to land.

TE: Tucker Kraft (S) (TE5 | $23 | 4.12) ♦, Juwan Johnson (S) (TE20 | $4 | 10.12), David Njoku (TE29 | $1 | 15.01)

Bipcoin finished in the 90th percentile last season and enters 2026 sitting at the 49th, which tells you everything about how fine the line is between a roster that runs through a tournament and one that merely survives it. The foundation is genuinely good: Josh Allen at QB1 paired with D.J. Moore as a projected starter gives this team a legitimate weekly ceiling, and Tucker Kraft at TE5 is the kind of advantage that quietly compounds over a long schedule. The concern is what happens when the margin-setters underperform. Xavier Worthy projects as the weakest starter at WR49, and the running backs behind the starters, Blake Corum at RB35, Jonah Coleman at RB51, are thin on upside. The draft leaned chalk, with twelve picks near consensus and two major reaches at the back end in Kimani Vidal and Sean Tucker, meaning there is little hidden equity to cash in if things go sideways. Bipcoin is not a pretender and not a favorite. It is a team that needs its good players to be great a few times at exactly the right moments.

SirVaser didn't win the draft with one thunderbolt pick. They won it by simply not losing rounds. Fourteen chalk calls kept the foundation stable, and the picks that deviated from consensus mostly worked in their favor. Bijan Robinson at RB2 anchors the roster with the kind of reliable ceiling that makes a manager's life easier, while the receiving corps runs deeper than most, with Garrett Wilson (WR17), Brian Thomas Jr. (WR31), and Carnell Tate (WR29) all projecting as starters. The real edge, though, might be at tight end, where Colston Loveland (TE3) and Kyle Pitts (TE7) form a pairing that most rosters can't match. Pitts finally silenced the skeptics in 2025, and the Atlanta quarterback situation, whatever it ends up being, doesn't look like it should derail him. SirVaser sits fifth in the Lego Star Wars: The Skywalker Saga division and in the 56th percentile overall, but this is a roster built to move up as the weeks go on.

There are teams built around a single audacious swing, and then there is DoctorLark, who simply drafted better than the room over and over again until the evidence became undeniable. A 68th-percentile tournament standing doesn't announce itself with fireworks, but it is built on picks like Jonathan Taylor at RB4 and Amon-Ra St. Brown at WR4, two genuinely elite projected starters anchoring a lineup that never had to manufacture depth out of nothing. The Jalen Hurts and Dallas Goedert stack quietly adds a layer of correlated upside to a roster that otherwise earns its projections the boring, effective way: chalk that happened to land correctly. Even the quarterback situation, which carries real uncertainty with Jaxson Dart's passing volume still an open question after a debut year spent making too many acquaintances with the medical tent, doesn't crater the outlook because Hurts absorbs most of the pressure at the top. DoctorLark didn't reinvent the draft board. They just consistently ended up on the right side of it, and that tends to be enough.

LuckyFantasyGuy didn't win the 2026 Scott Fish Bowl draft on one flashy pick. He won it by being right, over and over again. The anchor is Lamar Jackson, a QB3 who slid half a round past his ADP, and he arrives paired with George Kittle and Mark Andrews as projected starters at tight end, giving the roster two credible stack options before you even look at the rest of the board. The wide receiver group is where the quiet competence becomes loud: Chris Olave, Rashee Rice, Jameson Williams, and DK Metcalf all project as starters, and Jameson Williams doubles as the second piece of the Jared Goff stack, layering upside on top of stability. This is an 18-chalk, zero-reach draft, which sounds boring until you remember that the 2025 version of this team went 31-5 and scored at the 93rd percentile. LuckyFantasyGuy is sitting third in the Lego Star Wars: The Skywalker Saga division and in the top 20 percent of the field, and every number in this preview explains exactly why that feels right.

TE:

benwagner didn't mortgage the future on a single splash pick. He just quietly assembled one of the more complete rosters in the Lego Star Wars: The Skywalker Saga division, sitting at second with an 85th-percentile tournament standing. The engine here is a projected starter group headlined by De'Von Achane (RB6) and Ashton Jeanty (RB7) running alongside Puka Nacua (WR1), a combination that gives benwagner a genuine ceiling every single week. Brock Purdy (QB13) slid a full round past his ADP and lands as a projected starter, which is the kind of quiet efficiency that separates well-constructed rosters from lucky ones. The draft chart is almost aggressively boring: 15 chalk picks, one value, and only one major reach in Kaytron Allen (RB61), taken nearly three rounds early. That's not a draft full of fireworks, it's a draft that came out ahead on almost every transaction. After a 58-percent win rate and a 66th-percentile scoring season in 2025, the foundation was already there. This version looks like a step up.

Sitting first in the Lego Star Wars: The Skywalker Saga division and in the 93rd percentile of the field, johnnyp135 built this roster the right way: patient, disciplined, and almost impossible to criticize. The draft profile tells the story cleanly, eight values and zero reaches across the entire board. That kind of restraint is rare, and it shows up in the lineup. Brock Bowers at TE1 is the kind of foundational piece that quietly distorts how every other roster decision gets evaluated, and pairing him with Drake Maye at QB2 and Caleb Williams at QB6 means the quarterback position is not just covered, it is a genuine weapon. Neither Maye nor Williams came free, but both slid past their ADPs, which is exactly the discipline this draft reflects. Saquon Barkley at RB8 anchors the ground game alongside a backfield group that includes Javonte Williams at RB17 and Travis Etienne at RB18. There is talent at every level here, acquired without overpaying for any of it. This is what a clean SFB draft looks like.
