There is no spin available for tkingmode, no angle that makes this look like a calculated plan. The draft was a reach festival: nine minor reaches, three major ones, and somehow zero steals across the entire board. The major reaches tell the story most clearly. Michael Wilson came off the board at pick 7.02 against an ADP of 9.04, a WR39 taken like a WR14. Malik Washington went in round 13 when the field had him pegged for round 16. Elic Ayomanor went four and a half rounds early in round 16. Meanwhile, the one player who actually fell, Dalton Schultz, landed at TE22, which is not exactly the kind of heist that salvages a draft. Jahmyr Gibbs anchors the top of the roster, and Tyler Warren and Tucker Kraft give tkingmode a genuinely strong TE situation, but a team that went 5-31 last season and sits at the 4th percentile of the field coming in needed aggressive value-hunting. What it got instead was a manager who kept paying full price at a clearance sale.

TE:

ohubriso sits at 5th percentile in the field and 11th in the Princess Peach division, and the draft log explains exactly how it got there. The team committed five major reaches across the board, and the most damning ones follow a pattern: ohubriso kept reaching on receivers who were already well-represented. George Pickens, a WR10, was grabbed nearly a full round early in the second. D.J. Moore, a WR26, was yanked 2.2 rounds ahead of his market price in the fourth. Then, just to establish a theme, Travis Hunter came off the board in the ninth despite an ADP in the fourteenth, and Ted Hurst and Tory Horton each cost nearly five rounds of draft capital beyond what the market demanded. Meanwhile, the two players who actually fell to ohubriso, Matthew Stafford and TreVeyon Henderson, are a QB14 and an RB19, fine enough but hardly the kind of haul that justifies everything surrounding them. The projected weakest starter is Romeo Doubs at WR53, which is what happens when you spend your draft aggressively chasing players the rest of the field had already priced correctly.

There is no charitable read available for prodi in 2026, a roster that sits dead last in the Princess Peach division and in the bottom 10 percent of the entire field. The draft was a slow-motion disaster with five major reaches and five minor reaches against zero steals, meaning prodi consistently paid premium prices for discount goods. The most damning exhibit is the wide receiver group, where the projected starters top out at Zay Flowers at WR16 and the depth devolves into names like Tre Tucker at WR65 and Tank Dell at WR74, both hauled in multiple rounds before the market agreed they were worth selecting. Sam LaPorta at TE8 is a genuine starter and Dallas Goedert, who quietly posted four touchdowns in three weeks during last year's fantasy playoffs, gives the team some legitimacy at the position, but a Jared Goff and LaPorta stack cannot carry a squad this thin at the top. Prodi reached on a roster that looks exactly like what happens when a manager confuses activity with strategy.

There is no clean way to spin kvalenzuela's situation in the Princess Peach division. Sitting ninth in the division and at the 31st percentile of the field, this roster is projected to grind through another middling season, and the draft offered no obvious corrective. Every pick came in at chalk or worse, with zero steals and zero values across the entire board. The best players here are genuinely good: Puka Nacua projects as WR1, A.J. Brown as WR8, and Rashee Rice as WR13, which is a real foundation. But the lineup starts ten players, and after that top cluster the drop is steep and unforgiving. KC Concepcion, the projected weakest starter at WR50, is the kind of player who decides close weeks in the wrong direction. A 50 percent win rate and 42nd-percentile scoring in 2025 suggest this team already knows what a ceiling feels like, and nothing in the 2026 construction suggests it has moved higher.

TE: Kyle Pitts (S) (TE7 | $20 | 5.09), Evan Engram (TE36 | $0 | 17.09)

Princess Rosalinas Bang enters 2026 sitting eighth in the Princess Peach division and projecting at just the 32nd percentile of the field, and the draft board offers little reason for optimism. The clearest problem is a late-round spending pattern that bought quantity over quality at receiver: the manager reached a staggering 6.1 rounds early for Tyquan Thornton (WR97) and 5.7 rounds early for Malachi Fields (WR90), turning what should have been late-round lottery tickets into genuine draft capital commitments, then landed Denzel Boston (WR58) as the projected weakest starter after reaching 2.1 rounds for him too. Those misfires matter because the rest of the roster, while decent, is not good enough to paper over that kind of draft inefficiency. Caleb Williams (QB6) and De'Von Achane (RB6) give the team a legitimate top-shelf core, and the Dak Prescott and CeeDee Lamb stack adds some ceiling. But when your floor is built on Thornton and your draft chart shows four major reaches, no amount of upside at the top saves you from a long, grinding season.

TE: Mason Taylor (TE35 | $0 | 15.05), Theo Johnson (TE37 | $0 | 19.05)

AWells0 played the draft exactly the way the books say to play it. Jordan Love tumbled nearly four rounds past his ADP and landed at 11.05. Sam Darnold fell three and a half rounds to 12.08. Bryce Young came along for the ride at 13.05. Three quarterbacks acquired at genuine discount, which sounds like savvy roster construction right up until you realize none of them projects better than QB17, and the weakest projected starter among them is Darnold at QB21. The receiver group is legitimately impressive, with Jaxon Smith-Njigba at WR3, Nico Collins at WR9, and Chris Olave at WR11 all projecting as starters, but good value at a weak position is still a weak position, and three late-round quarterbacks bought on sale are still three late-round quarterbacks. AWells0 did almost everything right and still lands 7th in the Princess Peach division and 43rd percentile in the field. That is not bad luck. That is the draft telling you something the ADP never will.

mattswing sits at 45th percentile heading into 2026, and that number tells the whole story: not a contender, not a punching bag, just a team that needs things to break right. The clearest tension is at the extremes of the roster. Trey McBride at TE2 is a genuine difference-maker, and the surrounding tight end depth gives this lineup a consistent floor that most managers in the Princess Peach division can't match. But the margins cut both ways. Justin Herbert, landed at a steal five-plus rounds past his ADP, gives mattswing real upside at QB8 if he stays healthy and efficient, and the Baker Mayfield and Emeka Egbuka stack adds a correlated pop game that could swing a close week. The concern is that the draft showed a tendency to reach, with Parker Washington taken 2.2 rounds early and Keenan Allen pulled nearly five rounds ahead of consensus. If those bets miss, the ceiling drops in a hurry. This team finishes right around where it is projected, or it doesn't, and the answer probably comes down to Herbert and whether the reaches justify the faith.

samawesome87 didn't land any single transformative piece, but round after round this draft just kept coming out ahead. The foundation is genuinely elite: Bijan Robinson at RB2 and Ashton Jeanty at RB7 give this roster a backfield core most managers would build an entire draft around, and Colston Loveland at TE3 compounds that advantage with a starting tight end who projects as one of the best at his position in the field. Layer in Terry McLaurin at WR24 and Luther Burden at WR22 as projected starters, and the top of this lineup has real teeth. The steals help too, particularly Kyler Murray, snagged nearly three rounds past his ADP after latching on with the Vikings in what most observers expect to become his job at QB19. This roster finished at the 48th percentile in scoring last season, but the pieces here project meaningfully better than that, and a team sitting 54th percentile overall with Robinson and Jeanty anchoring the lineup has plenty of room to climb in Princess Peach.

TE: Mark Andrews (S) (TE14 | $7 | 9.11), Kenyon Sadiq (TE21 | $3 | 10.02)

Hamburgler23 didn't win the draft with one flashy pick. They won it by consistently finding players after the market moved on from them. Omarion Hampton, projected RB9, was still sitting there seven picks after his ADP suggested he'd be gone. Javonte Williams, projected RB17, fell nearly two rounds before this team scooped him in the eighth. Jordan Mason and Chris Rodriguez padded the same pattern deeper in the draft, both arriving later than they had any right to. The cumulative effect is a starting group anchored by Jonathan Taylor (RB4) and Hampton that projects as one of the more dangerous collections in the Princess Peach division. Joe Burrow at QB4 gives the roster a reliable floor at the position, and Mark Andrews at TE14 is the kind of steady, non-glamorous addition that quietly props up a lineup. Ladd McConkey and Makai Lemon were taken a little early on the receiver side, but those minor concessions look manageable against a draft that produced six values and zero major reaches. Sitting fourth in the division and at the 57th percentile, Hamburgler23 has the foundation to climb.

johnhaine1 sits third in the Princess Peach division and at the 73rd percentile of the field, and the draft record explains exactly why: five values, eleven chalk, and only two minor reaches among the players who matter. This is not a roster built on one spectacular swing. It is a roster built on not losing rounds, and that discipline shows up at the positions where it counts most. Brock Bowers at TE1 and Drake Maye at QB2 give this team a foundation that most managers are still trying to find in round ten. The Bo Nix and Jaylen Waddle stack adds a layer of upside that is easy to undervalue. Waddle escaped one of the more dysfunctional passing offenses in the league to land in Denver alongside Nix, who led the league in pass attempts last year, and the projected returns on both reflect a situation that is quietly better than its price suggests. johnhaine1 did not win the draft on any single pick. He just kept coming out ahead on each one.

GriddyONgrave sits second in the Princess Peach division and in the 99th percentile of the entire field, and the draft sheet explains exactly why. This is a roster built on discipline: eight values, one steal, and almost nothing paid above market rate. The steal alone tells the story, Kenneth Walker III landing at 4.12 when the field had him priced at 3.05, a full round and a half of pure found money on a projected RB10. Pair that with Lamar Jackson falling nearly a round to 3.01 and Derrick Henry slipping a full round to 5.01, and GriddyONgrave was essentially running the board while everyone else chased. The projected lineup is anchored by Jackson at QB3, Walker, Henry, and Kyren Williams all drawing starter projections, plus Ja'Marr Chase at WR2 giving this team a genuine top-end weapon at receiver. There are no glaring soft spots, no panic picks, and the weakest projected starter is Tony Pollard at RB30. On most rosters that is a problem. Here it is barely a footnote.

jmaccamj sits atop the Princess Peach division and checks in at the 99th percentile of the entire field, and honestly, the draft board tells you exactly why. This is a roster built with discipline. Christian McCaffrey at RB3 and Saquon Barkley at RB8 came in as good value, and Jeremiyah Love at RB13 followed suit, giving this team a backfield tier that most managers would auction off a limb for. Then there is the quarterback situation, which looks almost unfair in retrospect: Jalen Hurts at QB9 slid two full rounds past his ADP, and Trevor Lawrence at QB10 fell more than three. Both are projected starters. That is not luck, that is patience. The one wrinkle worth watching involves Justin Jefferson at WR6, who struggled to connect with last year's Vikings offense but lands in a more promising situation with Kyler Murray now running the show in Minnesota. If that partnership clicks, Jefferson vaults this roster even further. At three steals and five values against a single major reach, jmaccamj drafted like someone who actually did their homework.
