SaraLovesFootball8 drafts like someone who made up their mind before the board was even posted and refused to let reality talk them out of it. The signature move is a pair of quarterback reaches that would make a lesser analyst weep: Justin Herbert, taken nearly a full round early, and Jordan Love, yanked off the board 2.7 rounds ahead of his ADP, consuming a fourth-round pick on a QB17 projection. In a positionless format where you field your best players in almost any combination, spending that kind of premium real estate on a second quarterback is the kind of decision that takes a roster from contender to cautionary tale before training camp opens. Ja'Marr Chase at WR2 and Malik Nabers at WR12 give this team a genuine ceiling, but the floor is held up by Brian Robinson at RB45, Juwan Johnson at TE20, and a draft sheet that shows zero steals against three major reaches. Landing 15th percentile in the field is not a verdict this team can appeal. The evidence was submitted in rounds two and four.

There is something genuinely melancholy about watching a 95th-percentile team dissolve into a 19th-percentile projection, and pmbigman is living that tragedy in real time. The 2025 version of this roster went 32-4 and scored 5,134 points. The 2026 version is sitting 11th in the Luigi Division, held together at the top by a brilliant collection of tight ends, Trey McBride, Colston Loveland, Tucker Kraft, and Sam LaPorta among them, but conspicuously thin everywhere the 2025 machine was humming. The receiver group projects as the weakest in the field, with Tre Harris at WR72 as the headliner, and the draft did not help matters, logging four major reaches including Patrick Mahomes off the board two rounds early and Matthew Stafford two rounds after that, burning premium capital on quarterbacks in a positionless format where that currency could have shored up almost anything else. Tucker Kraft's ACL recovery adds another layer of uncertainty to what was supposed to be a pillar. pmbigman built a reputation last year. This year, the roster is borrowing against it.

KestutisV enters 2026 sitting 10th in the Luigi Division and in just the 21st percentile of the field, and the roster doesn't offer much reason for optimism. The draft tells the story plainly: three major reaches and zero steals. Taking Jayden Daniels at 1.10 when his ADP sat nearly a full round later was aggressive but defensible given that he stacks with Terry McLaurin. What is harder to defend is spending an eighth-round pick on Bryce Young (QB26) more than three rounds ahead of schedule, then circling back for Mac Jones (QB39) in round 15 at a staggering seven-plus rounds early. That is a lot of draft capital chasing quarterback depth in a positionless format where starter quality is everything. Meanwhile, the projected starters that matter most, James Cook (RB5) and Chase Brown (RB11), are genuinely good, but the supporting cast grades out as ordinary at best, and there is no obvious late-round steal to change the math. KestutisV finished near the middle of the field in 2025. The arrow this year points lower.

The vibes around riese1313 heading into 2026 are roughly what you'd expect from a team sitting 9th in the Luigi Division and projecting out at the 25th percentile of the field: not great, with no obvious escape hatch. The foundation is there in spots, Drake Maye at QB2 stacked with A.J. Brown at WR8 is a genuine engine, and Tyler Warren at TE4 alongside Harold Fannin at TE6 gives the team two legitimate weapons at that position. But the draft tells a quiet, damning story: zero steals, zero values, fifteen chalk picks, and two major reaches headlined by Tank Dell, taken more than three rounds before his ADP. When your margin for error is thin and your best draft-day swings come up empty, you need the chalk to hit perfectly. Bo Nix, for his part, projects as a back-end QB15, which is fine depth, but fine depth does not move the needle on a roster that is already asking its best players to carry too much weight. The ceiling here is a long climb from where the floor sits.

DSainio has bet the whole season on correlation, and when the stack works, this roster can genuinely hurt people. Dak Prescott and CeeDee Lamb are a legitimate pairing, Lamb projected WR5 and Prescott at QB7, and layering Jared Goff with Amon-Ra St. Brown gives DSainio a second gear if the Cowboys game script goes sideways. The ceiling here is real. The problem is everything beneath it. Goff was taken at 4.01 with an ADP of 6.04, a two-round reach that ate premium capital on a QB16 projection, and the depth behind the top starters thins out in a hurry, with Wan'Dale Robinson sitting at WR47 as the weakest projected starter. Last season was a disaster, a 3-33 record that landed in the 4th percentile of scoring, and nothing about this construction screams correction. DSainio is not building toward safety; every week is a referendum on whether those pairings fire. If they do, this team climbs. If they do not, 2026 looks a lot like 2025.

DirtyJobs sits at the 49th percentile after a 39-percent win rate in 2025, and everything about this roster says the same thing: fine, not great, not a disaster. The upside lives at the top, where Christian McCaffrey (RB3), Jonathan Taylor (RB4), and Saquon Barkley (RB8) give this team a genuine foundation worth building around, and Trevor Lawrence (QB10) adds real ceiling after a career year that quietly snuck up on the fantasy community. The problem is that the margins DirtyJobs needs to win close weeks are being squeezed by a draft board that leaned on hope more than value. The wide receiver group is projected weak, and the team spent early capital chasing it, reaching nearly five rounds early on Christian Kirk (WR100) and almost three on Deebo Samuel (WR70). Those are the kinds of small decisions that separate a 49th-percentile team from a top-quartile one. Lawrence staying healthy and producing at QB10 while Javonte Williams (RB17), a two-round draft steal, justifies the optimism would go a long way. But optimism is not a plan, and this roster has just enough cracks to punish overconfidence.

TE: T.J. Hockenson (TE23 | $2 | 13.01), Colby Parkinson (TE31 | $1 | 18.12)

DukeOfBerlin sits at 54th percentile in a field where 54th percentile means you are one bounce away from a deep run and one bad week away from irrelevance. The foundation is genuinely impressive at the top: Puka Nacua at WR1 and Drake London at WR7 give this roster a ceiling that most managers in the Luigi Division would trade for, and the draft board helped, with London and Rashee Rice both sliding past their ADPs to land at the back of their respective rounds. The margins, though, are where this season gets complicated. Kenneth Walker III at RB10 is a real asset, but Jordan Mason at RB41 is the projected weakest starter on the roster, and the quarterback situation reads like a multiple-choice test where none of the answers feel quite right. Malik Willis at QB24 cost a seventh-round pick in a ten-round ADP, a reach that stings when you scroll past it. DukeOfBerlin is not a pretender and not a contender. It is a team that needs the projections to break right, the starters to stay healthy, and Mason to be a lot more RB41 than RB54.

TE: Gunnar Helm (TE26 | $2 | 13.04)

PARLAYSNEVERHIT didn't win the draft with one thunderclap pick. They won it by consistently getting more than they paid for. De'Von Achane landing at RB6 when the board let him slide nearly a full round past his ADP is the kind of quiet win that separates sharp managers from lucky ones, and pairing him with Bijan Robinson at RB2 gives this roster a backbone that most teams in the Luigi Division would envy. Tee Higgins at WR19 and Carnell Tate at WR29 round out a starting group that holds up at every spot, with Rhamondre Stevenson projected as the weakest link at RB31, which is a comfortable floor. The one wrinkle worth watching is the quarterback investment: reaching nearly a full round early for Caleb Williams is defensible given his QB6 projection, but burning four rounds of draft capital ahead of ADP on Fernando Mendoza at QB27 is harder to justify. Still, sitting at the 66th percentile of the field with no obvious soft underbelly, PARLAYSNEVERHIT drafted a team that belongs in the conversation.

Gibbs me that Win didn't win the draft with one flashy swing, they won it by being right, over and over again. Jahmyr Gibbs landing as the RB1 projection anchors everything, but the quiet backbone of this roster is a receiving corps where Nico Collins sits at WR9, DeVonta Smith checks in at WR14, and Zay Flowers at WR16, all projected starters, all acquired without overpaying. Smith in particular is worth watching closely: with A.J. Brown now in New England, the Eagles offense is finally his to command, and a full alpha season could make WR14 look like a bargain. Lamar Jackson at QB3, snagged two picks after his average draft position, only sweetens the picture, especially with Flowers running routes for the same offense. The one blemish is C.J. Stroud, reached 2.2 rounds early and projecting at QB22, but in a positionless format you don't start your fourth-best quarterback anyway. A 71st-percentile projection and a 98th-percentile finish last season suggest a team that knows exactly what it's doing.

After an 8-28 record and a 15th-percentile scoring season in 2025, RotoStreetWolf arrives in 2026 looking less like a team that needs a rebuild and more like a team that needed a roster. The foundation of this rebound is an embarrassment of backfield riches: Ashton Jeanty at RB7, Omarion Hampton at RB9, Derrick Henry at RB12, and Jeremiyah Love at RB13 are all projected starters, and Henry alone was a draft-day gift, sliding more than a full round past his ADP. Then there is Josh Allen anchoring the quarterback position at QB1, which gives this roster a ceiling most managers in this field simply cannot match. The weak link is receiver depth, with Davante Adams at WR25 leading a thin group, but in a positionless format the star power elsewhere renders that largely moot. RotoStreetWolf projects 76th percentile in the field and second in the Luigi Division, and given where this team was twelve months ago, that is not a ceiling, it is a launching pad.

TE: Dallas Goedert (S) (TE15 | $6 | 10.07)

WaiSallas didn't build this roster on one flashy swing. They built it pick by pick, and the cumulative effect lands them at 76th percentile in the field heading into 2026. The receiver group is the clearest example of the approach: Jaxon Smith-Njigba at WR3 and George Pickens at WR10 give this team two genuinely elite options at the top, and the manager kept adding usable depth without overpaying for it, landing Marvin Harrison Jr. at WR33 a full round and a half after his ADP suggested he'd be gone. The same patience showed up at tight end, where Dallas Goedert at TE15 slid more than a round past his expected range. Joe Burrow at QB4 anchors the whole operation. The 2025 season was a rough one, a 23rd-percentile finish that suggests this roster is capable of significantly more, and the 2026 projection reads like a course correction in progress. Third in the Luigi Division for now, but the underlying construction argues this team belongs higher.

Skunkdrool didn't swing for the fences and miss, didn't gamble on upside and pray. This roster was built the way a good draft should be built: round after round of coming out slightly ahead. Justin Jefferson at WR6 slipped to pick 2.04 when his ADP was 1.12, a near-steal at a position where a single round of difference can separate elite from merely good. Brock Bowers at TE1 anchors the back end of the lineup and gives Skunkdrool a positional advantage that compounds every single week. Mark Andrews at TE14 fell a full 1.3 rounds past his ADP, landing at 10.04, which means the manager was still extracting value in the double-digit rounds while others were just filling out rosters. Garrett Wilson at WR17 and Luther Burden at WR22 round out a starting group with real teeth. The one genuine reach, Jaylin Noel at WR83, is a footnote on an otherwise disciplined sheet. At 92nd percentile in the field and first in the Luigi Division, Skunkdrool earned that standing pick by pick.
