mjgovier drafted like someone who had one idea and refused to let the board talk them out of it. The RB-heavy construction is understandable in a vacuum, but the execution was a disaster of impatience: Travis Etienne (RB18) went nearly three rounds early, Jordan Mason (RB41) went three and a half rounds early, and Elijah Arroyo (TE40) was taken nearly seven rounds before his ADP, which is less a reach than a full sprint off a cliff. Seven major reaches on a single roster is not bad luck, it is a philosophy, and that philosophy has produced a team sitting dead last in the division and in the 2nd percentile of the field. The one star worth building around, Saquon Barkley (RB8), arrives carrying real baggage: at 29, coming off a down 2025 season, and now reportedly headed toward a reduced workload in Philadelphia. mjgovier paid for a workhorse and may be getting a timeshare. Last year's team went 4-32. There is no structural reason to expect improvement.

There is no salvageable spin here. MikexBetts lands 6th percentile in the tournament, and the draft record tells you exactly why: four major reaches, two minor reaches, and not a single steal across the entire board. The Wan'Dale Robinson situation alone is damning, a WR47 pulled nearly three full rounds before his ADP, burning a seventh-round pick on a player who projects as the weakest starter on the roster. Omarion Hampton and Kyren Williams, both reaches, anchor a group that could look serviceable on paper until you realize the draft capital spent acquiring them foreclosed better options everywhere else. Amon-Ra St. Brown at WR4 is the one genuinely exciting piece here, and Jayden Daniels came at decent value, but two good outcomes out of eighteen picks is not a foundation, it is a highlight reel for a eulogy. The Civilization division has ranked this team eleventh, and nothing in this draft history makes that verdict feel harsh.

FreeMatty sits 10th in the Civilization division and in the 7th percentile of the entire field, and the draft record offers little comfort: four major reaches against zero steals, which is about as bleak a ratio as you can post when you needed every edge you could find. The headliner is Jonathan Taylor, taken at 1.05 when his ADP sat at 2.01, a reach that cost real draft capital before a single other roster decision was made. The rest of the projected starters include James Cook at RB5 and Kenneth Walker III at RB10, so the backfield grades well, but above the line it gets thin fast. Jared Goff checks in at QB16, and the fallback options behind him are Bryce Young at QB26 and Jacoby Brissett at QB28, with Brissett himself grabbed nearly three full rounds ahead of his ADP. The receiver group is led by Courtland Sutton at WR37 and Michael Wilson at WR39, both reaches, both fringe starters.

Coming off a 42-percent win rate in 2025, FreeMatty needed a sharp draft to change the trajectory. This was not that draft.

TE: Juwan Johnson (TE20 | $4 | 11.01), Pat Freiermuth (TE30 | $1 | 15.01)

There is no polite way to say this: hojaud is staring down a 2026 season that looks a lot like 2025, which finished at the 41st percentile and probably felt worse than that. The receiver group is genuinely strong, with Nico Collins, George Pickens, Tee Higgins, and Davante Adams all projected starters and all grading out between WR9 and WR25, and Jahmyr Gibbs anchors everything as the RB1. But the draft offered no upside and no surprises, logging zero steals and zero values against 14 chalk picks and five reaches, including Davante Adams taken a round and a half early and Sean Tucker, a projected RB65, pulled 2.7 rounds before his ADP. That is not building a roster, that is paying a premium for players who were already priced correctly or who barely crack the projections at all. The result is a team sitting ninth in the Civilization division and in the bottom quarter of the field, with Collins and Gibbs doing real work at the top and almost nothing below them capable of changing the math.

TE: Harold Fannin (S) (TE6 | $22 | 5.12)

Concussed Words is a team that will win exactly as many games as it deserves, which is either a comfort or a quiet horror depending on your perspective. The receiver group is legitimately frightening, with CeeDee Lamb (WR5) and Justin Jefferson (WR6) anchoring a corps that also includes Chris Olave (WR11) and Jameson Williams (WR21) among the projected starters, the kind of top-end concentration that wins weeks outright when the field goes cold. The problem is the margins, and the margins here belong to the backfield. RJ Harvey (RB28) projects as the weakest starter on this roster, and the names behind him, Tony Pollard (RB30), J.K. Dobbins (RB36), Aaron Jones (RB38), offer depth but not upgrades. Patrick Mahomes (QB12), landed at pick 8.01 after sliding nearly two and a half rounds past his ADP, gives the manager real leverage at quarterback. Eighth in the Civilization division and 56th percentile tournament-wide, this is a team that could easily finish third or could just as easily miss the money entirely, depending on which version of Harvey shows up every single week.

TE: Dalton Schultz (TE22 | $3 | 12.06), Gunnar Helm (TE26 | $2 | 13.07), Jake Tonges (TE34 | $0 | 17.07)

Branch Manager sits at 57th percentile, seventh in the Civilization division, and that tells you almost everything: good enough to believe in, not good enough to assume anything. The backbone here is a strong run of backs, with Ashton Jeanty (RB7), Derrick Henry (RB12), and Breece Hall (RB14) all projected as starters, and the Josh Allen (QB1) and D.J. Moore (WR26) stack adding a ceiling that most rosters at this tier simply cannot match. DeVonta Smith (WR14) is the interesting wrinkle, taken about three quarters of a round early but carrying legitimate upside now that A.J. Brown has moved on to New England and the Eagles' target share is suddenly wide open. Whether Smith becomes the alpha receiver this offense has always needed or continues to be brilliant-but-secondary is exactly the kind of question that defines a 57th-percentile team. Branch Manager does not win the draft room or lose it there either. It wins or loses in the margins, on weeks when Allen erupts and Moore catches everything thrown his way, and loses when the back end of the roster quietly costs a point here and a point there.

TE: Kenyon Sadiq (TE21 | $3 | 12.02), Eli Stowers (TE32 | $1 | 15.11)

Last year Just One More Pick scraped the basement, finishing in the 11th percentile with a 9-27 record that was about as fun as it sounds. The 2026 version looks like a genuine correction. The receiving corps is the engine here: Rashee Rice (WR13), Zay Flowers (WR16), Jaylen Waddle (WR23), and Carnell Tate (WR29) all project as starters, giving this team four legitimate contributors in a positionless format where that kind of depth translates directly into points. Tate is a nice story by himself, a value pick who slid more than a round past his ADP. Then there is the Lamar Jackson and Flowers stack, a correlation play that could spike the ceiling on big Baltimore weeks. Jackson himself was a minor reach at 1.11, but if you have a chance to land a QB3 in round one, you take it and you do not apologize. The floor here is already far above last year's disaster, and the upside is real. Sixth in the Civilization division feels conservative.

Birdo didn't win the draft with one thunderbolt pick. They won it by consistently landing players after the rest of the room had moved on. Garrett Wilson fell a full round past his ADP before Birdo scooped him at WR17. Luther Burden slid similarly, going in the sixth round despite a fifth-round price tag. Chase Brown, projected RB11, came along at 4.05 when his consensus value was closer to 3.08. None of those are lottery tickets, just players the market undervalued and Birdo was patient enough to collect. The foundation underneath all of it is real: Joe Burrow at QB4 and Brock Bowers at TE1 give this roster a ceiling that most teams in the Civilization division cannot match. The draft sheet shows five values, zero major reaches, and a weakest projected starter in Khalil Shakir at WR51, which is a fine problem to have. This is a team that did not force anything and ended up with almost everything it needed, sitting comfortably at 61st percentile and with legitimate reason to climb further.

masonnwhite lands at 82nd percentile in this field, which is a genuinely impressive outcome given how loudly the draft board screamed at them along the way. Three major reaches, including Mason Taylor pulled 4.6 rounds early and Michael Mayer taken 5.6 rounds before consensus said they were due, should have left this roster creaking. Instead, the receiving corps is the story: Puka Nacua at WR1 and Drake London at WR7 are projected starters who would anchor any contender in this tournament, and Ladd McConkey at WR20 and DK Metcalf at WR36 give real depth behind them. The framework here is a manager who trusted their own board over the field's consensus, paid a price in draft capital to get there, and ended up with a legitimate top tier anyway. Whether that reflects genuine conviction about player value or simply a fortunate outcome is the question masonnwhite will spend the season answering. Right now, the roster is the argument, and it is a fairly persuasive one.

There was no lottery ticket at the top of this draft, no boom-or-bust gamble that the whole season rides on. kswissdynasty just kept winning small, and the ledger adds up. The crown jewel is Trey McBride, a TE2 projection snagged nearly a full round after his ADP suggested he'd be gone, a quiet steal that anchors a tight end group that also includes Kyle Pitts at TE7 and Oronde Gadsden at TE16. Meanwhile, Caleb Williams slid more than a round past his price tag and lands as a projected QB6, which is the kind of value that makes a roster quietly dangerous. Layer in Jaxon Smith-Njigba at WR3 and Tetairoa McMillan at WR15, and the projected starters carry real weight from top to bottom. The draft sheet shows one outright steal, three additional value picks, and zero major reaches across the entire roster. That's not luck, that's execution. kswissdynasty enters 2026 sitting third in the Civilization division and in the top 12 percent of the field, built the quiet way, one correct decision at a time.

Nate Henry's draft didn't have a moment that made everyone stop scrolling, but the cumulative effect lands him in the 92nd percentile of the field and second in the Civilization division, and that's not an accident. The foundation is a receiving group that is genuinely hard to argue with: Ja'Marr Chase at WR2, A.J. Brown at WR8, and Malik Nabers at WR12, all projected starters, all acquired at or near their price. Nabers actually slipped nearly a full round past his ADP, which is the kind of quiet win that separates a good draft from a great one. The tight end depth follows the same pattern, with George Kittle and Travis Kelce each falling roughly a round and a half past their expected spots, giving Henry WR-caliber production from a position where most managers are scrambling. The minor reaches scattered through the back half of the draft are manageable bets, not panic moves. This is a roster built the way you're supposed to build one, round by round, without needing the market to bail you out.

keilcase sits first in the Civilization Division and at the 97th percentile of the entire field, and the draft tells you exactly why. Christian McCaffrey fell nearly a full round and a half past his ADP before keilcase scooped him at RB3, and Cam Skattebo dropped two full rounds to land at RB20, the kind of sequence that looks less like luck and more like a manager who knew exactly where the board was soft and waited. The value didn't stop there. Jalen Hurts came in at QB9 nearly a round late, Dallas Goedert at TE15 fell almost two rounds, and Terry McLaurin slid a full round to fill out a starting group with real teeth. Three steals, four values, zero major reaches across the whole roster: that's not a happy accident, that's a clean draft. Hurts and Goedert running as a stack adds a little connective tissue to the top of the lineup, and a team that went 32-4 with a 100th-percentile scoring season in 2025 doesn't need much more of an argument. This roster is built to go deep.
