yessirreeBob sits 12th in the Man division and in just the 18th percentile of the field, and nothing about this roster suggests a dramatic reversal is coming. Christian McCaffrey and Ashton Jeanty give the team a legitimate foundation, but the rest of the projected starters thin out fast, with Chuba Hubbard projected as the weakest starter at RB29. The receiver corps is the real drag, topping out at Brian Thomas Jr. at WR31 with Jayden Reed at WR48 as the next projected contributor. On the draft side, this was mostly a chalk operation with two major reaches that didn't pay obvious dividends, Breece Hall taken 1.5 rounds early at RB14, and Baker Mayfield grabbed two full rounds before his ADP at QB18. Justin Herbert, the one genuine value pick of the draft, carries some intrigue with Mike McDaniel arriving to run the offense, but Herbert's ceiling has been capped by game scripts and a lean rushing profile for years, and nothing about that picture has fully changed. There is no obvious lever left to pull here, just optimism doing a lot of heavy lifting.

DRoberts94 sits 11th in the Man division and inside the bottom quarter of the tournament field, and the roster doesn't offer much reason to argue with those numbers. The one legitimate bright spot is a strong group of tight ends anchored by Trey McBride at TE2, Harold Fannin at TE6, and Sam LaPorta at TE8, but elite production at one spot can only carry a roster so far when the rest of the depth chart is this uneven. The receiver corps grades out weak, with Wan'Dale Robinson projected as the weakest starter at WR47, and the quarterback situation leans heavily on Matthew Stafford at QB14 and Bo Nix at QB15, the latter taken nearly two and a half rounds before his ADP. That reach on Nix stands as the draft's defining moment, a moment where DRoberts94 spent premium capital on a player the market simply did not value the same way. De'Von Achane at RB6 gives the team a genuine star, but with 15 chalk picks and a draft that produced almost no surplus value, there are no hidden levers left to pull. This roster is largely what it appears to be, and appearances are not encouraging.

Shizzbob did almost everything right in the draft and still landed at 10th in the Man division, projected at just the 23rd percentile. That is the kind of outcome that makes you question the entire exercise. The process was clean: fourteen chalk picks, only three minor reaches, and two genuine values, including A.J. Brown sliding nearly a full round past his ADP to land at 3.06. The receiver corps looks legitimate on paper, with Jaxon Smith-Njigba at WR3, Brown at WR8, and George Pickens at WR10 all projecting as starters. That is a strong top end. But the ceiling collapses fast, and by the time you reach Rashid Shaheed at WR57 as the projected weakest starter, the floor has already caved in. The quarterback situation offers no rescue, with Jared Goff projecting as QB16 and Sam Darnold as QB21. Shizzbob drafted patiently, drafted sensibly, and built a roster that still does not clear the bar. Some ledgers just will not balance, no matter how carefully you keep them.

zromes85 did almost everything right on draft day, which makes the 34th-percentile projection and ninth-place division standing all the more painful. Sixteen chalk picks, two values, zero major reaches, the kind of draft sheet a process-oriented manager frames and hangs on the wall. Ladd McConkey fell a full round and a half past his ADP, Rome Odunze dropped more than a round, and both land as projected starters. The discipline was real. The problem is that the upside the roster needs to climb out of the bottom third of the field runs almost entirely through Malik Nabers, and Nabers is a question wrapped inside another question. The torn ACL John Harbaugh called "not simple" already cratered his value from a top-10 redraft receiver down to WR21 before training camp highlights nudged it back. He projects at WR12 right now, a number that only holds if he is healthy, available for Week 1, and building chemistry with Jaxson Dart. zromes85 followed the rules of the draft and still needs a medical report to go right. That is the cruelest kind of correct.

Duncan282 enters 2026 sitting eighth in the Man division and projected around the 40th percentile of the field, and the roster makes it easy to see why. The receiver group is legitimately impressive on paper, with Amon-Ra St. Brown (WR4), Chris Olave (WR11), Tetairoa McMillan (WR15), and Jaylen Waddle (WR23) all projecting as starters, and that firepower would carry most teams deep into a tournament. The problem is that the quarterback position is where points actually get manufactured, and Kyler Murray (QB19) and Tyler Shough (QB20) project as the two weakest starting passers a manager could realistically field. The Shough/Olave stack offers a slim path to upside if Shough outperforms his projection, but betting a tournament run on a QB20 connecting with Olave feels like bringing a winning lottery ticket to a casino for safekeeping. Michael Pittman (WR44) is projected as the weakest starter, and with zero steals in the draft, there is no undiscovered asset waiting to save this lineup. Duncan282 drafted almost entirely to chalk and is now hoping the market was wrong about everyone who matters most.

TE: Tyler Warren (S) (TE4 | $31 | 3.05), Isaiah Likely (S) (TE13 | $7 | 9.05), Michael Mayer (TE39 | $0 | 17.05)

Ed7509 sits at 49th percentile, division rank 7, which tells you everything and nothing at the same time. Ja'Marr Chase at WR2 and Saquon Barkley at RB8 give this roster a genuine ceiling, and Tyler Warren at TE4 adds another top-end piece that most managers would take without hesitation. The floor, though, is shakier. Three major reaches on draft day, including Sean Tucker at RB65 taken five rounds ahead of his ADP and Michael Mayer at TE39 grabbed nearly five rounds early, suggest a manager who was chasing upside that the projections simply do not confirm. Khalil Shakir projects as the weakest starter at WR51, which means the margin between a winning week and a losing one could hinge on whether Shakir catches eight or catches two. Brock Purdy stacking with Mike Evans is a tidy little hedge, but it does not dramatically change the calculus. This is a team with enough talent to beat anyone on a given week and enough uncertainty to lose to nearly anyone too.

KB757 did not construct this roster by swinging for fences and occasionally connecting. They constructed it by consistently not missing. The foundation is Jahmyr Gibbs at RB1, which is the kind of anchor that lets a manager build everywhere else without panic, and that is exactly what happened. The tight end group alone is quietly absurd: Colston Loveland at TE3 and Tucker Kraft at TE5 are both projected starters, with Brenton Strange at TE17 and Chigoziem Okonkwo at TE19 providing genuine depth behind them. Loveland also connects to a Caleb Williams stack, adding a ceiling layer to what is otherwise a floor-first build. The draft chart tells the same story in a different way: nineteen chalk picks and zero steals sounds boring until you realize it means KB757 got the players they wanted at the prices they should have cost, which is harder to execute than it looks. Sitting sixth in the Man division and at the 60th percentile, there is room to climb, and this roster has the consistency to do it.

TE:

Zmanbro didn't win the draft on one flashy pick. They won it by consistently landing players at or past their expected price, and the receiver group is where that discipline shows up most clearly. CeeDee Lamb at WR5 and Justin Jefferson at WR6 form a top-end foundation that most managers would envy, and Rashee Rice at WR13 and Luther Burden at WR22 keep that tier from thinning out quickly. The Mahomes and Rice stack gives Zmanbro a built-in multiplier on one of the tournament's better connective plays. On the ground, Derrick Henry at RB12 and TreVeyon Henderson at RB19 carry real weight, and Kyle Monangai slipping nearly two rounds past his ADP is exactly the kind of quiet win that separates disciplined drafters from lucky ones. The one soft spot in the conversation is quarterback depth beyond Patrick Mahomes, where the fallback options project as fringe starters. But when your receiver ceiling looks like this and your draft chart shows three values against zero major reaches, you belong in the discussion.

birdman570 didn't win the draft on one flashy pick. The roster was built the same way good teams usually are: round after round of not losing. The backfield anchors tell the story. Kenneth Walker III (RB10), Chase Brown (RB11), and Jeremiyah Love (RB13) project as three of the better players at their position in the entire field, and Brown arrived a full round after his ADP suggested he should have been gone, which is about as clean a win as a drafter can register without anyone noticing. The passing game carries real upside too, with Josh Allen (QB1) connected to D.J. Moore (WR26) in a stack that gives birdman570 a ceiling whenever those two get hot on the same week. Jayden Daniels (QB5) provides genuine depth at a position where most rosters are exposed. The overall picture sits at the 63rd percentile, good for fourth in the Man division, and if the projections hold anywhere close to form, this team earns every bit of that standing.

IreneTurner didn't win any draft-day lottery tickets, and she didn't need to. This roster was built pick by pick, edge by edge, and the cumulative result lands her third in the division and at the 70th percentile of the field. The foundation is real: Puka Nacua projects as WR1, Lamar Jackson checks in at QB3, and both arrived at a modest discount to their ADPs. Garrett Wilson at WR17 and Kyren Williams at RB15 give the starting group legitimate depth at every tier. The one spot worth watching is Marvin Harrison Jr., a WR33 projection carrying real uncertainty, as Arizona's quarterback situation remains unsettled and Harrison has yet to fully deliver on the enormous expectations that followed him out of college. RJ Harvey, the draft's most notable steal, fell more than two rounds to land at pick 12.09 despite a RB28 projection, a quiet windfall that rounds out what is already a competitive core. No single pick made this team. That's exactly the point.

gmkruse did not build this roster with one thunderbolt swing. He built it the way a good team usually gets built, by coming out ahead on pick after pick until the advantages stacked into something real. Joe Burrow lands as QB4 and falls a little past his ADP, which is exactly the kind of quiet win that compounds across a draft. Pair him with Tee Higgins, projected WR19 and a genuine starter, and that stack gives the whole roster a floor that is hard to undercut. Bijan Robinson projects as RB2, Nico Collins as WR9, and Zay Flowers as WR16, meaning three of the starters on this lineup sit comfortably in the upper tier at their position. Travis Kelce came back for 2026 with something to prove and lands here projected at TE10 alongside George Kittle at TE9, which is the kind of depth that makes the best-ball decisions easier as the season grinds forward. The sum of all this is a team sitting in the 83rd percentile of the field, second in the division, and firmly in the conversation.

FFQueenB enters 2026 sitting first in the Man division and in the 87th percentile of the field, and the draft tells you exactly why: no dramatic gambles, just consistent execution that kept coming out ahead. The clearest example is Drake Maye, a QB2 projection scooped up four picks past his ADP, the kind of quiet advantage that compounds over a season. Pair Maye with Brock Bowers at TE1 and Kyle Pitts at TE7, and FFQueenB is projecting premium production at positions where most managers are settling, without sacrificing anything elsewhere. Omarion Hampton at RB9 and DeVonta Smith at WR14 round out a starting group that is simply difficult to beat on paper. The one subplot worth watching is Jaxson Dart, a QB11 projection whose ceiling is genuinely tantalizing but whose floor involves more trips to the medical tent than anyone would prefer. That uncertainty barely registers when your foundation is this sound. This team did not need a lottery ticket. It just needed a good draft, and it had one.
