Scott Fish Bowl Rankings, Analysis, and Team Breakdowns

Rankings are based on actual Scott Fish Bowl ADP from the FantasyLife Scott Fish Bowl tool. Note that in a major tournament like this with nearly 5,000 teams, there are miniscule degrees of separation at play. One player having a breakout season can drastically change a team's results.

These rankings are intended to be entertaining and add in a small way to a wonderful cause. Please consider donating to Fantasy Cares.

As the 2025 fantasy football season looms, the outlook for Sigmund Bloom's team feels bleak, overshadowed by a sense of inevitable disappointment. Despite last year's middling performance, finishing in the 60th percentile, this year's prospects appear grim with a humbling placement in the bottom 7th percentile overall and dead last in their division. The team's quarterback situation is fraught with uncertainty, anchored by Dak Prescott at QB15 and Bryce Young at QB22, both unlikely to inspire confidence or bring glory on the field. While the wide receiver corps is undeniably formidable, boasting talents like CeeDee Lamb, A.J. Brown, and Garrett Wilson, their brilliance seems dimmed by the glaring weaknesses elsewhere. The running back situation is particularly dire, headlined by Jonathan Taylor who is frustratingly unsupported by Jordan Mason, leaving the team struggling to find any ground game momentum. Misguided draft choices, especially reaching prematurely for players such as Dak Prescott, Daniel Jones, and even CeeDee Lamb, have left the roster bereft of depth and fraught with regret. As the season kicks off, one can't help but feel that the hope once associated with fantasy football has transformed into a daunting challenge for the team, as they desperately strive to climb out of the shadows and find a glimmer of success amid overwhelming odds.

As the season looms on the horizon for John Hogue's fantasy football team, the outlook appears grim and overshadowed by a series of questionable draft decisions and precarious roster constructions. Ranked 11th in their division and languishing in the lowly 14th percentile overall, hopes for a triumphant campaign seem to have all but evaporated. Despite boasting the mightiest tight end duo in Brock Bowers and Travis Kelce—undoubtedly the crown jewels of the lineup—the rest of the roster is riddled with uncertainties that cast a shadow over any prospects of success. The running back situation is particularly dire, with Tyjae Spears, ranked outside the top 40 at his position, serving as a projected starter—a harrowing omen for an already beleaguered team. The wide receiver corps, headlined by Amon-Ra St. Brown, offers little solace, struggling to find its footing amid inconsistent performances and shaky rankings. This instability is further compounded by the reckless reaches on players like J.K. Dobbins and Emeka Egbuka, which squandered valuable draft capital. Even the attempt to secure a stack bonus with Patrick Mahomes feels like a flicker of hope in an otherwise dismal lineup. The season ahead looks to be an uphill battle, fraught with challenges that threaten to extinguish any flickering glimmers of optimism for John Hogue's embattled squad.

As the 2025 fantasy football season looms, Carla Gruse (@COINFLIP22) seems poised for a struggle that may be hard to shake off. Ranked 10th in their division and languishing in the 17th percentile overall, the team faces an uphill battle against formidable odds. Despite boasting a strong quarterback lineup with Josh Allen, Caleb Williams, and C.J. Stroud, the roster is riddled with vulnerabilities, particularly at tight end, where Kyle Pitts's TE17 ranking barely inspires confidence. The wide receivers offer flashes of hope—especially with Nico Collins ranked WR7—but fall short of delivering consistent firepower across the board. Jayden Higgins, at WR52, stands as a stark reminder of the team's depth woes. Further complicating matters, the draft strategy saw several players taken significantly earlier than their average draft positions. Notably, Caleb Williams's selection at 4.09, well ahead of his 6.01 ADP, might have sacrificed critical value that was sorely needed elsewhere. As Carla Gruse heads into the season, the glimmer of promise from their quarterback stack seems overshadowed by the relentless challenges of climbing out of such a steep competitive hole.

As the 2025 fantasy football season looms, Nicholas Mijares (@Blanco_TheBlack) finds itself perched in an enviable position: firmly ensconced in mediocrity within the Monstars division, while heroically languishing near the bottom of the tournament rankings. With their quarterbacks, Jared Goff and Trevor Lawrence, tasked with redefining the concept of "middle-of-the-road," the team's hopes seem to rest on the shoulders of a running back corps so deep it could double as a swimming pool. Perhaps the strategy is to keep the ball on the ground, lest Mike Gesicki attempt to redefine tight end play with his breathtakingly uninspiring TE22 ranking. The real gamble, however, lies with Rhamondre Stevenson, whose projected importance is as dubious as his RB40 rank suggests. Meanwhile, Ja'Marr Chase stands alone, a WR1 beacon amidst a sea of perplexing draft decisions. The team masterfully secured Travis Etienne and others at slightly better values, while reaching early for Alvin Kamara and Joe Mixon, presumably to inject some unpredictability into their game plan. On the bright side, expect some riveting moments when Dylan Sampson and Troy Franklin inexplicably take the field well ahead of their anticipated value. All in all, it's shaping up to be a season of delightful underachievement.

Ah, the 2025 season for Eric Dickens (@DLFootball) promises to be a veritable rollercoaster through the realm of mediocrity and shattered dreams. As they sit comfortably in their divisional recliner at rank eight, it's clear they've decided that the middle of the pack is a perfectly adequate vantage point from which to spectate this year's chaos. Despite having a trifecta of quarterbacks with Baker Mayfield, Kyler Murray, and Drake Maye locked and loaded, it's almost charming how the team has managed to remain so conspicuously average. Meanwhile, Zach Ertz will be tasked with the Sisyphean endeavor of proving that a TE20 can still make waves when all eyes are begrudgingly on him. With Justin Jefferson and Drake London impressively holding the WR fort while Stefon Diggs, taken a bit later than most would have predicted, seems to have been secured via some sort of bargain bin magic, the wide receiver squad remains the true highlight of this otherwise thrillingly uninspired ensemble. Here's hoping Darnell Mooney and Tre Harris, also snatched up at a discount, can provide the necessary zest to push them up from the bleachers of the 24th percentile. Who knows, maybe this year they'll break free of their own standard and aim for the dizzying heights of the 50th percentile once more.

As the fantastical 2025 fantasy football season unfolds, Scott Steele (@FSnake8484) finds itself teetering on the enigmatic edge between mediocrity and magnificence. Standing firmly in the Monstars division at rank 6, with an overall percentile of 48, the team is a curious concoction of brilliance and bewilderment. The backfield brigade led by the prodigious Bijan Robinson and his merry band of ground-gaining comrades, including Josh Jacobs and Tony Pollard, orchestrates a symphony of yardage that echoes through the ages. Yet, amidst this running revelation, the delicate dance of destiny hinges upon Michael Pittman, who, despite being plucked earlier than the fates might have favored, must rise to the occasion as the team's pivotal pass-catcher. In the labyrinthine corridors of draft decisions, Zach Charbonnet emerges as a hidden gem, glistening with value procured slightly off the beaten path, while the head-scratching selection of Andrei Iosivas leaves fans and fortune-tellers alike scratching their heads in wonder. As Ladd McConkey and D.J. Moore weave their own tapestry of aerial acrobatics, all eyes remain fixed on Pittman's enigmatic journey. For in this absurdist odyssey, where gridiron gladiators meet the whimsy of whimsical winds, Scott Steele's fate hangs delicately, poised to either tumble into obscurity or ascend to the pantheon of fantasy football folklore.

As the Matt Flowers team embarks on their 2025 fantasy football odyssey, they find themselves poised in the cosmic middle of absurdity, ranking 7th in their elusive Monstars division and nestled comfortably within the 48th percentile in the grand melee. Their running back symphony, conducted by Christian McCaffrey RB5 and Derrick Henry RB7, promises a harmonious trot through the gridiron woods while Chase Brown RB12 and James Conner RB20 compose melodic interludes. Yet, one cannot overlook Rachaad White RB43, the whimsical afterthought, who dances to his own beat. Watching from the bleachers, the wide receivers, Courtland Sutton WR26 and Calvin Ridley WR36, bask in the ennui of mediocrity, while Cooper Kupp WR46 whispers sweet nothings to the fantasy gods. Yet, this saga centers around Dalton Kincaid TE13, a figure of enigmatic destiny drafted at the eleventh hour, stepping into the spotlight with the grace of a pigeon in a top hat. In a world where MarShawn Lloyd defies time, selected before his destined moment, and Theo Johnson rises from obscurity like a misplaced comma, the team is a mosaic of delightful chaos. As Cooper Kupp, too, strides onto the field ahead of schedule, the season ahead promises to be an orchestral overture of the unexpected, with each player contributing to the symphonic absurdity of Matt Flowers' quest for fantasy glory.

The 2025 season holds a promising horizon for Neal Maligno (@ClockDodgers) as they gear up to tackle both their division and the broader tournament field. Positioned favorably in their league, they boast the most formidable set of running backs, with Ashton Jeanty leading the charge alongside Breece Hall and Kyren Williams. These powerhouses offer a significant advantage on the ground, poised to drive the team's successes. While the quarterback situation presents challenges, the strategic value picks of Matthew Stafford and Geno Smith aim to deliver solid performances when it counts. Jonnu Smith, a crucial piece of this puzzle, could be a game-changer if he exceeds expectations and tightens up what might be perceived as a vulnerability. In the wide receiver department, seasoned pros like Davante Adams and Mike Evans bring experience and potential for explosive plays, aiming to elevate the team's standing. This balanced mix of strategic drafting and potential impact players positions them well to make noteworthy strides this season, promising an exciting journey ahead as they aim to rise above their current rankings.

As the 2025 fantasy football season kicks off, the Matthew Geiger (@) team is poised for a promising year, aiming to build on lessons learned from last year's challenges. Their strategic focus on wide receivers has paid off, boasting the strongest lineup in their division with standout talents like Puka Nacua, Rashee Rice, and Tyreek Hill leading the charge. While their quarterback situation presents some questions, the depth in their receiving corps offers a solid foundation for success. Key player Matthew Golden, though a critical part of the starting lineup, could be the pivotal factor in elevating their performance this season. Additionally, securing Marquise Brown and Brenton Strange well below their ADPs adds a layer of value and flexibility to the roster. With Jahmyr Gibbs providing a reliable presence at running back, the team enters the season ranked fifth in their division, already showing improvement in the overall standings. While they have reached on some players, like Will

Shipley, their strategic planning leaves room for optimism as they look to climb the ranks and make a significant impact this year.

In the shimmering arena of fantasy football's 2025 season, Team Jaden Cuypers (@MG_Dynasty) stands poised to unleash a symphony of gridiron prowess that echoes across both division and tournament landscapes. Ranked 3rd in the prestigious Monstars division, they wield an arsenal led by the electrifying Lamar Jackson, whose mastery as QB1 promises to orchestrate victories with unparalleled precision. Flanked by the dynamic Jalen Hurts, QB4, and the intriguing potential of Anthony Richardson at QB27, their quarterback lineup is a formidable force feared by all challengers. Yet, amidst this luminescent constellation, the battleground of running backs presents a curious enigma. Quinshon Judkins, RB23, anchors the backfield with tenacity, while Cam Skattebo, RB34, emerges as a pivotal figure, embodying the spirit of an underdog determined to defy expectations. Not to be overshadowed, the wide receivers form a cadre of talent, blending youth and agility with the likes of Brian Thomas Jr., WR8, and the enigmatic Marvin Harrison Jr., WR16, whose flair for the dramatic captures imaginations week after week. Xavier Worthy and George Pickens, acquired with shrewd calculation beyond their ADP, add depth and unpredictability to this already explosive mix. The strategic acumen of capitalizing on hidden values such as Ricky Pearsall and Marvin Mims further cements this team's reputation for cunning roster construction. With a median age of merely 23.5 years, Team Jaden Cuypers embodies the audacity and vigor of youth, daring to challenge the status quo and carve a new path to glory. As they enter this grand season, riding high in the 72nd percentile overall, this team is primed not merely to compete but to ascend, etching their name among the legends of fantasy football lore.

As the 2025 fantasy football season kicks off, Travis Wantland (@Twantland) emerges as a formidable contender with a blend of strategic drafting and dynamic talent. With a division rank of 2 and situated in the impressive 86th percentile overall, this team is poised for a successful run. Despite uncertainties at quarterback with Justin Herbert and Sam Darnold, the team boasts an enviable tight end lineup perfectly tailored for the TE Premium format, featuring George Kittle, Tyler Warren, Dallas Goedert, and Hunter Henry. Their savvy draft strategy secured great value in players like Malik Nabers and Tyler Warren, although they took some risks with Rashid Shaheed. However, even with a WR division rank of 5, the wide receiver corps, led by Malik Nabers, Travis Hunter, and Jerry Jeudy, promises explosive performances. Although a couple of late-round reaches might have raised eyebrows, the team's overall depth and strength, particularly in tight ends, position them as serious challengers in the upcoming competition.

As the 2025 fantasy football season kicks off, Nick Pietrantonio's team (@Coldzero21) is poised for an impressive run. This powerhouse of a team is coming off an average 2024 season, but they've learned from past challenges and are now entering the new season with renewed vigor and a stellar lineup. Ranked first in their competitive Monstars division and standing proudly in the top 98th percentile overall, they demonstrate a remarkable turnaround. Key to their strength are the formidable quarterbacks, Jayden Daniels and Joe Burrow, who promise to lead the charge with precision and consistency. Despite the running backs being a perceived weak spot, strategic draft choices like Omarion Hampton provide surprising value, while the tight ends, Trey McBride and T.J. Hockenson, stand ready to dominate in this TE Premium setup. The wide receiver corps remains solid, featuring Jaxon Smith-Njigba and DeVonta Smith as standout performers, each capable of game-winning plays. Meanwhile, savvy late-round picks, including Josh Downs and Zay Flowers, ensure depth and resilience throughout the season. This team's strategic acumen and well-rounded roster lay a strong foundation for success. With their eyes set on maintaining their top division rank and continuing to shine among the best in the tournament, Nick Pietrantonio's squad is ready to make waves and write a new chapter of triumphs in the 2025 fantasy football season.
