FantasyBluechip arrives in the 2026 Scott Fish Bowl sitting 12th in the Odd Job division and in just the 8th percentile of the field, and the roster tells you exactly why. Justin Jefferson is a genuine asset at WR6, but the supporting cast thins out fast, and the draft process did little to change the trajectory. Two major reaches define the construction: Kyler Murray hauled in at the equivalent of a second-round premium over his WR19 ADP, and Kyle Monangai grabbed more than two rounds early to land as a projected RB33. When you're burning early capital on a QB19 and an RB33, you're essentially paying penthouse prices for a walk-up apartment. The good-value finds, including Isaiah Likely and KC Concepcion, came in the back half of the draft, which is the right place to gamble, but they project as a TE13 and WR50 respectively, meaning the margin for error here is almost nonexistent. Jefferson carries this roster on his back, and in a deep tournament field, one elite receiver is rarely enough to compensate for a foundation built on reaches.

There is no charitable read available for Jhayes719, and the draft sheet confirms it. Five major reaches across the roster tell the whole story, but the quarterback situation is where this thing really unravels. Jhayes719 reached 1.7 rounds early for Patrick Mahomes at pick 3.12, which would be defensible if Mahomes were a lock to play, except he is not, still recovering from a torn ACL and LCL suffered in Week 15 of 2025. And rather than hedge elsewhere, Jhayes719 doubled and tripled down on the position, grabbing Tua Tagovailoa at QB31 nearly three rounds early and Shedeur Sanders at QB32 more than three rounds early, burning late capital on a position that already had a question mark at the top. RJ Harvey, projected at RB28, was pulled 2.4 rounds before consensus said to take him. The 2025 résumé, a 5-31 record and a fifth-percentile scoring finish, suggests this manager's instincts were already working against them, and nothing in this draft indicates the lesson was learned.

WhoDey & The Blowfish sit 10th in the Odd Job division and in just the 11th percentile of the field, and nothing about this roster suggests that number is about to climb. The one genuine asset here is a receiver group anchored by CeeDee Lamb (WR5), DeVonta Smith (WR14), Garrett Wilson (WR17), and Jaylen Waddle (WR23), and even Waddle's outlook carries some nuance: he moves from Miami's dysfunction to Denver, where Bo Nix threw the ball as much as anyone in the league last year, which is a legitimate upgrade in opportunity. But that receiver depth is doing a lot of heavy lifting for a roster that is otherwise thin on upside. Joe Burrow (QB4) is the clear centerpiece beyond the receivers, yet the draft ledger offers little comfort, with five minor reaches and two major ones and not a single steal to show for 22 picks. A roster built on chalk and reaches, without the high-end breakout candidates that make those gambles worthwhile, is a roster that has already played most of its cards. WhoDey & The Blowfish may be out of levers before the season even starts.

There is no painless way to say this about jmcgoldr: this roster is in trouble, and the draft did not help. Four major reaches in a single draft is the kind of record you hang on the wall as a cautionary tale, and the damage shows up where it hurts most. Malik Willis landing at QB24 after being drafted more than two rounds early is a quiet catastrophe in a format where quarterback scoring can swing a week, and Jordan Mason, reached three-plus rounds ahead of his ADP, projects as RB41, which is a depth piece masquerading as a plan. The wide receiver group is genuinely the one redeeming quality here, with Jaxon Smith-Njigba at WR3, Rashee Rice at WR13, and Tetairoa McMillan at WR15 all projecting as starters, but a strong receiver group cannot carry a roster sitting at the 16th percentile of the field. jmcgoldr finished 23-13 a year ago and had real momentum. In 2026, the path back to that looks long and narrow.

TE: Kenyon Sadiq (S) (TE21 | $3 | 13.08), David Njoku (TE29 | $1 | 14.05)

Dennis Clausen-RotoWire sits at the 53rd percentile, which is exactly as comfortable and exactly as precarious as it sounds. The foundation is genuinely good: James Cook at RB5, Amon-Ra St. Brown at WR4, and a run of early-round running backs that gives this roster real week-to-week floor. The problem is that the margins Clausen needs to go his way are already being stressed at the edges. The starting quarterback situation leans on Caleb Williams, a QB6 projection who came at modest value, but the fallback options are Daniel Jones at QB25 and Bryce Young at QB26, both of whom were reached before their ADPs and neither of whom inspires confidence as a pivot. Kenyon Sadiq at TE21 rounds out a tight end room that is, charitably, functional. Last year's 56 percent win rate and 51st-percentile scoring tell the same story the 2026 roster does: this is a team that competes without dominating, that survives without coasting. In a field this competitive, surviving is not nothing, but it is also not enough to stop sweating in October.

DynastyRich sits at 57th percentile like a thermostat stuck at 68 degrees, never uncomfortable enough to fix and never warm enough to brag about. The backbone is genuinely good: Christian McCaffrey at RB3, De'Von Achane at RB6, and Saquon Barkley at RB8 give this roster a top end that can carry a bad week, and Kyle Pitts at TE7 and Dallas Goedert at TE15 keep the tight end room quietly productive. The problem is that the margins this team lives on are thin ones. Trevor Lawrence comes in at QB10, taken a little early at 4.03 against an ADP of 4.11, so there is no surplus value to draw from at the position. Wan'Dale Robinson projects as the weakest projected starter at WR47, and in a positionless format where every roster spot is a scoring opportunity, that ceiling matters. DynastyRich went 19-17 last year and scored at the 73rd percentile, which means the talent is real but the execution is not yet decisive. The 2026 version looks like the same negotiation, won or lost one close week at a time.

Zillah went into this draft and apparently decided that quarterback was a position worth panic-buying in bulk, taking Tyler Shough 1.6 rounds early, Kirk Cousins nearly four rounds ahead of consensus, and Mac Jones more than four rounds before anyone else wanted him. On paper, that looks like a manager chasing a plan that didn't exist. On the roster, it barely matters, because the top of this team is legitimately good. Bijan Robinson at RB2 and Ashton Jeanty at RB7 give zillah a foundational core that most managers would trade their late-round quarterbacks for, and Colston Loveland at TE3 paired with Sam LaPorta at TE8 adds real projected production at a position where depth separates contenders from pretenders. The WR group is the quietest part of the roster, and Parker Washington's status as a projected starter comes with the genuine ceiling question of whether Jacksonville actually wants him leading their receiving corps or whether Travis Hunter eventually crowds him out. Sitting 58th percentile and sixth in the Odd Job division, zillah is right on the edge of interesting, which is exactly where conviction and luck tend to look identical.

TE:

rreck5 didn't swing for the fences and miss. They just kept hitting singles, and those singles add up. The clearest example is Lamar Jackson, a QB3 who slid nearly a full round past his ADP and landed at 2.12, the kind of quiet steal that doesn't generate a draft-night highlight but absolutely shows up in weekly scores. Pair Jackson with Jahmyr Gibbs at RB1 and you have a foundation that most managers in this field would envy. The depth behind Gibbs is where the patient drafting really compounds: Breece Hall, TreVeyon Henderson, and Bucky Irving are all projected starters, and Bhayshul Tuten offers genuine upside in Jacksonville's backfield now that Travis Etienne has moved on. The receiver group is thinner, with Jakobi Meyers projecting as the weakest starter at WR45, but in a positionless format the backfield quality more than compensates. This roster finished in a rough 24th percentile in 2025 scoring, making the 72nd percentile projection feel like a serious leap, and one the draft largely justifies.

There was no heist here, no moment where j03yb3rry walked away with the crown jewels while everyone else blinked. What there was, round after round, was a draft that simply kept coming out ahead. Justin Herbert fell a full round past his ADP and landed at QB8, Travis Kelce slid nearly two rounds and still projects as a TE10 starter, and Michael Wilson drifted a round and a half before j03yb3rry scooped him at WR39. None of those picks made anyone gasp. All of them made the roster better. Layer in the Matthew Stafford and Puka Nacua stack, with Nacua projecting as WR1, and the lineup has a ceiling that the draft-position-adjusted cost didn't come close to reflecting. Kenneth Walker III and Derrick Henry were the two reaches worth noting, though neither was dramatic enough to cause real damage. The 2025 campaign landed in the 30th percentile, so there's a baseline to beat, and landing at the 76th percentile in projected tournament standing suggests this roster is already clearing it.

JFryeDP lands third in the Odd Job division and in the 84th percentile of the field, and the draft tells you exactly why: this roster was built through accumulation rather than any single lightning-bolt moment. No steals on the board, but three genuine values pulled later than they should have been, and not a single reach across seventeen chalk picks. That kind of discipline compounds. The foundation is Josh Allen at QB1, a projected starter who essentially sets a floor most managers would kill for. Below him, Drake London at WR7 and Harold Fannin at TE6 were both taken past their ADPs, meaning JFryeDP got starter-caliber production at a modest discount. Omarion Hampton at RB9 rounds out a starting group that has real upside at the top. The weakest projected starter, Xavier Worthy at WR49, is the one name that gives pause, but when the rest of your lineup looks like this, you can afford one soft note in the chord. JFryeDP did not outsmart the room; they simply outworked the process, pick by unremarkable, effective pick.

BestJohnson32 sits at 88th percentile in the field and second in the Odd Job division, and the draft sheet tells you exactly why: seven values landed, zero major reaches taken, and the roster loaded with upside where it counts most. Ja'Marr Chase at WR2 and Nico Collins at WR9 headline a receiving group that is genuinely difficult to attack, with Emeka Egbuka (WR18) and Terry McLaurin (WR24) providing the kind of depth that keeps a lineup humming through byes and bad weeks. Tyler Warren (TE4) and George Kittle (TE9) give the manager two legitimate options at a position that routinely separates contenders from pretenders. The one thread worth watching is Jalen Hurts, a QB9 projection taken at 5.04 after falling more than a round past his ADP. Hurts has posted five consecutive top-10 fantasy finishes, but the offseason departure of AJ Brown to New England puts his passing game in unfamiliar territory. If that offense sputters, some of his floor comes with it. Still, this is a disciplined, well-built roster, and disciplined rosters win in April and hang around deep into the season.

The Cake is a Lineup enters 2026 sitting first in the Odd Job division and in the 89th percentile of the field, and the draft record explains why: four values, fourteen chalk, and barely a scratch on the other side. That is not a roster built on lottery tickets. Tucker Kraft falling nearly two rounds past his ADP to land as a projected TE5 starter is the kind of quiet win that compounds over a season, and Dak Prescott slipping a full round to give this team a QB7 anchor is the same story told twice. The stack pairing Prescott with George Pickens adds another layer of ceiling, and A.J. Brown, now paired with Drake Maye in New England, arrives as a projected WR8 with legitimate upside if he can stay on the field. The two late reaches at receiver are real, but they come in rounds 17 and 18, meaning the core was already locked in before the margin for error tightened. This team did not get lucky. It just kept winning small.
