Wispey enters 2026 sitting near the bottom of the Pablo Sanchez division and in the 2nd percentile of the entire field, and the roster itself does not suggest a dramatic reversal is coming. The foundation is genuinely appealing: De'Von Achane at RB6 and Ashton Jeanty at RB7 give this team a legitimate top-end punch, and Tetairoa McMillan projects as a WR15. But the draft did nothing to create any margin for error, producing zero steals and zero values against 13 chalk picks, two of which came as major reaches. That kind of draft leaves a team completely dependent on projections holding, and projections at the bottom of the roster are already shaky. RJ Harvey projects as the weakest starter at RB28, and the situation in Denver, where Dobbins is back and Jonah Coleman was added in the draft, points toward a messy committee that could squeeze Harvey further. If Achane or Jeanty slips, there is no depth pick lurking to absorb the damage. This is a roster built on hope and held together by prayer.

TE: T.J. Hockenson (TE23 | $2 | 12.02), David Njoku (TE29 | $1 | 17.11)

There is no gentle way to say this: DynastyWizzFF is in trouble, and the draft did not help as much as it needed to. Sitting 11th in the Pablo Sanchez division and in just the 6th percentile of the field, this roster needed a draft full of coups and instead logged three major reaches, including Bhayshul Tuten taken nearly two and a half rounds early and Kaytron Allen grabbed a full four rounds before consensus. Those are the kinds of bets that have to hit to justify the opportunity cost, and if they miss, the damage compounds quickly. The one genuine bright spot is James Cook at RB5, a legitimate weekly anchor, and Caleb Williams projects as QB6 with a Luther Burden stack that at least gives the team a ceiling play each week. But Williams was himself a reach at 1.11, and outside of Cook the projected starters grade out as painfully ordinary. A 44 percent win rate and a 50th-percentile scoring finish in 2025 screamed that something needed to change. The 2026 draft whispered that it didn't.

mforde did almost everything right on draft day. Seventeen chalk picks, one minor reach, and virtually nothing taken before its time. The process was sound. The result, somehow, is a team sitting tenth in the Pablo Sanchez division and projecting out at the 34th percentile, which is the kind of outcome that makes you question whether the draft matters at all. Brock Bowers at TE1 and Joe Burrow at QB4 give this roster a real ceiling, and the Jared Goff stacks with Jameson Williams and Sam LaPorta add connective tissue that sharp drafters love. But then you get to the receiver group and the floor starts to buckle. Williams at WR21 is fine. DK Metcalf at WR36 and Jordyn Tyson at WR34 are usable. The projected weakest starter is Rashid Shaheed at WR57, which is not a disaster by itself but says something about how thin the margin is at the positions that matter most. mforde played the value game correctly and still ended up here. That is not a process failure. It is just football being cruel.

brima24 enters 2026 sitting ninth in the Pablo Sanchez division and in just the 34th percentile of the field, and the roster gives little reason to expect a dramatic climb. The top of the lineup is legitimately good: Jaxon Smith-Njigba projects as WR3, Drake London as WR7, and Kyle Pitts as TE7, and that core alone keeps this team from being a complete write-off. But the drop-off is steep and comes fast. Wan'Dale Robinson projects as the weakest projected starter at WR47, and when a WR47 is your floor, ceiling conversations get uncomfortable quickly. The draft offered no help on that front, producing zero steals or values against 15 chalk selections and a major reach on Malachi Fields, taken three-plus rounds early and projecting all the way down at WR90. Even Pitts, a minor reach himself, carries quiet risk after the Chargers signed David Njoku late in the offseason, muddying what should have been a clean role. The talent at the top is real, but there is no depth behind it and no draft surplus to paper over that reality.

FFAnonymous enters 2026 sitting eighth in the Pablo Sanchez division and just outside the median of the field, which is a polite way of saying the roster is fine without being good enough. The top end is real: Ja'Marr Chase projects as WR2, and Omarion Hampton checks in at RB9, giving the team a legitimate one-two punch at the top. The problem is that the drop-off is steep and the depth leans on players who need things to go right. Parker Washington is the cautionary tale here, a receiver who led Jacksonville in targets last season almost by accident, with Brian Thomas Jr. and Travis Hunter both capable of reclaiming that role at any point. Washington projects as WR35, which is serviceable, but "serviceable" is not what you need when your quarterback situation hinges on Jaxson Dart at QB11 and the draft sheet shows two major reaches already spent. Last year's 18th percentile finish was not a fluke warning sign, it was the floor. Without a clear lever to pull, this team projects to tread water and hope that's enough.

PistolPete26 sits at the 54th percentile and seventh in the Pablo Sanchez division, which is exactly the kind of position that keeps a manager awake at night. Not comfortable, not panicking, just waiting. The ceiling is real: Trey McBride at TE2 and CeeDee Lamb at WR5 give this roster genuine difference-makers, and landing Lamb at 2.05 when his ADP sat at 1.11 was the kind of quiet draft win that compounds over a season. The floor, though, has its own questions. Jalen Hurts projects as QB9, a strong number, but the departure of AJ Brown to New England puts his passing game in unfamiliar territory, and if that offense sputters, the rushing touchdowns that have propped up five consecutive top-10 fantasy finishes start to look less automatic. The 2025 campaign ended at the 22nd percentile in scoring, which means improvement is the expectation, not the luxury. With mostly chalk on the board and the margins this thin, PistolPete26 needs Hurts to silence the skeptics and the supporting cast to stay healthy enough to matter.

JackLowry3 built something real here, and the draft sheet does not entirely explain how. Six minor reaches and a major reach in Pat Bryant, taken more than three rounds before his ADP, paint a picture of a manager who was not waiting around for consensus. The thing is, the roster validates the aggression. Christian McCaffrey at RB3 and Justin Jefferson at WR6 anchor the lineup with genuine upside, and the decision to reach for TreVeyon Henderson in round five, a full round before the market caught up, gave this team a projected RB19 starter at a discount in everything but draft capital. Trevor Lawrence fell nearly a round and a half past his ADP and landed here as a QB10 starter, which softens the sting of the reaches considerably. The 2025 record of 11 and 25 is the one number that demands an answer, and nothing in this draft erases it cleanly. But the roster is better than that history, and the conviction shown on draft day, right or wrong about Bryant specifically, produced a team that projects well above where it finished.

kyl3borg lands at 70th percentile in the field heading into 2026, and the draft record explains why: not a flashy heist operation, just a manager who kept coming out ahead of the board. The centerpiece is a two-quarterback setup that any SFB manager would envy, with Josh Allen at QB1 falling to 1.09 and Jayden Daniels at QB5 sliding all the way to 4.04, a full round and a half past his ADP. That Daniels haul looks even better given the stack with Terry McLaurin, a projected starter at WR24, giving kyl3borg a built-in correlation bonus on top of the raw value. The backfield is similarly loaded at the top, with Saquon Barkley, Kyren Williams, and Bucky Irving all projecting as starters. Yes, Barkley cost a slight overpay at 2.04 against a 3.02 ADP, but when you are pulling Daniels out of the fourth round, you have capital to spend. This roster did not make headlines on draft day. It just quietly built something worth watching.

mflanders213 enters 2026 looking like someone who actually did their homework before the draft, and the results show. The centerpiece is Drake Maye, a QB2 projection snagged nearly a full round past his ADP, which is the kind of quiet efficiency that separates a good draft from a great one. Pair that with a backfield anchored by Bijan Robinson (RB2) and Breece Hall (RB14), and the projected starters on this roster have the kind of top-end weight that wins weeks in bunches. The disciplined approach extends deep into the draft, where Pat Freiermuth came off the board 1.8 rounds late and Brenton Strange fell over a round past his number, giving mflanders213 real depth at tight end without sacrificing anything at the top. Fourteen chalk picks and zero reaches in either direction is not a fluke, it is a manager who trusted the board and let value come to them. The 82nd percentile tournament projection is no surprise. This roster was built for it.

TE: Mark Andrews (S) (TE14 | $7 | 8.12) ♦

Javier Yeray Pea Giraldo didn't need a single transcendent pick to build something worth respecting, just a draft that kept finding the right player at the right price. The clearest example is Lamar Jackson, a QB3 who somehow slid almost a full round past his ADP and landed in Giraldo's hands at 2.12, paired immediately with Mark Andrews in a stack that should generate points in waves all season. Then at 4.12, DeVonta Smith, a WR14, fell nearly a round past his ADP as well, giving the roster a legitimate top-fifteen receiver for starter consideration at a discount. When you add David Montgomery arriving a full round late at 9.01, the pattern becomes undeniable: this roster was assembled with patience and precision rather than luck. The one blemish is Chris Bell, reached nearly five full rounds early at 14.12, a curious move on a late flier. But that is a footnote on an otherwise disciplined draft that has Giraldo sitting third in the Pablo Sanchez division and in the top 16 percent of the entire field.

loganbeck30 did not build this roster with a single thunderclap pick. They built it the way good teams actually get built, by coming out ahead on exchange after exchange until the advantages stacked into something real. Jonathan Taylor at RB4 sliding half a round past his ADP in the second round is the kind of quiet win that sets a draft's tone, and the Mahomes-Rashee Rice stack layered on top of that foundation gives the lineup a ceiling that most managers in the Pablo Sanchez division cannot match. Amon-Ra St. Brown at WR4 was taken six spots ahead of his ADP, a minor reach by the numbers, but when the player in question projects as a borderline top-five receiver, the cost of being aggressive there is negligible. Add Harold Fannin at TE6 and George Kittle at TE9 as projected starters, and the top of this roster is genuinely formidable. After finishing in the 68th percentile in 2025, loganbeck30 has assembled a team that projects to the 86th. That is not a coincidence. That is drafting.

Dwyrn enters 2026 sitting first in the Pablo Sanchez Division and in the 93rd percentile of the entire field, and the draft record explains exactly why: no major reaches, three genuine values, and a roster built through consistent, disciplined execution rather than one lottery-ticket swing. The centerpiece is a receiver corps that reads like someone accidentally stacked the deck, with Puka Nacua (WR1), A.J. Brown (WR8), Nico Collins (WR9), and Zay Flowers (WR16) all projecting as starters, the kind of depth where WR48 Jayden Reed is the weakest name you're putting on the field and that's a perfectly acceptable problem to have. Behind the receiver haul, the quarterback situation reflects the same patient approach: both Brock Purdy (QB13) and Jordan Love (QB17) were taken a full round or more after their ADPs, meaning Dwyrn got legitimate upside at the position without paying for it. Love also connects with projected starter Christian Watson, adding a stack that could turn a good week into a great one. This roster didn't get built on a single inspired moment. It got built pick by pick, and the standings reflect it.
