Gabbie96 did almost everything right on draft day. Nearly every pick landed at or after ADP, the board delivered Tyjae Spears three rounds late and Dalton Schultz three rounds late, and Ja'Marr Chase projects as WR2. That is a genuinely good draft process, and the reward for it is a team sitting 12th in the Gyarados division and in the 15th percentile of the field. The cruelty is in the details. Tucker Kraft, reached two-plus rounds early at pick 2.10, is the kind of TE5 upside that justifies the aggression, but Kraft is coming off a November ACL tear and the Packers receiving corps lost more than it gained this offseason, meaning his path back to that starring role runs through a recovery that is not yet proven. Cooper Kupp, pulled nearly three rounds ahead of his ADP, projects as WR88. Those two early triggers are not fatal individually, but together they swallowed the surplus that a disciplined draft had spent all night building, and now the math simply does not close.

theoceanliner sits 11th in the Gyarados division and at just the 17th percentile of the field, and the roster architecture explains why. The backfield is genuinely impressive, anchored by Bijan Robinson (RB2) and Ashton Jeanty (RB7), but in a positionless format that strength only carries so far when the receiver group grades out this poorly. Parker Washington (WR35), Courtland Sutton (WR37), Jordan Addison (WR43), and Michael Pittman (WR44) are the projected starters at the position, and none of them inspire much confidence as weekly difference-makers. Worse, the draft offered little relief. Five minor reaches and a major reach on Pat Bryant (WR86), a player taken three full rounds ahead of consensus, suggest a manager straining to find upside that simply was not there on the board. Trevor Lawrence (QB10) gives the lineup a functional starting option under center, but functional is doing a lot of heavy lifting here. This team is not without talent, but the gap between its best players and its projected starters is too wide for the standings to ignore.

There is a particular kind of exhaustion that sets in when you look at a roster and realize the ceiling and the floor are basically the same room. Hammbone sits 10th in the Gyarados division and in just the 19th percentile of the field, and the construction does not suggest a reversal is coming. The bright spots are real: Drake Maye projects as a QB2, Trey McBride as a TE2, and the Herbert/McConkey stack gives the lineup a genuine identity. But the receiver corps thins out fast after Ladd McConkey, with Jayden Higgins projecting as a WR54 as the projected weakest starter, and when you scan the draft sheet you find 12 chalk picks and six minor reaches, zero steals, zero values. Hammbone did not find any hidden leverage in the draft room. Last season's 41st percentile finish was already a warning; nothing in this build argues the 2026 version gets over that hump. The talent at the top is enough to stay respectable, but respectable in this field is another way of spelling 10th place.

TE: Eli Stowers (TE32 | $1 | 16.06)

jeffratcliffe is sitting ninth in the Gyarados division and checking in at just the 35th percentile of the field, and the draft record offers little reason for optimism: zero steals, two modest values, and a draft philosophy that leaned heavily on chalk and minor reaches. The minor reaches are worth noting because they concentrate in the back half of the draft, where Adonai Mitchell, Isaac TeSlaa, and Jalen McMillan were all taken ahead of their ADPs without much payoff in projected rank. The genuine stars are here, Amon-Ra St. Brown at WR4 and A.J. Brown at WR8 give this roster a legitimate top end, and the Goff-St. Brown stack adds a correlating bonus, but the supporting cast fades quickly, with Matthew Golden projecting as a WR52 and Eli Stowers grading out as a TE32 with no clear upgrade path behind him. When your floor is this shallow and your draft surplus is essentially zero, you are betting everything on the top players staying healthy and outperforming their projections, which is a thin strategy to carry through a full tournament.

CharlieSisian is staring down an uphill climb in the Gyarados division, currently slotting eighth in the division and sitting at just the 36th percentile in the field, and the draft board does not offer much reason for optimism. The roster's saving grace is a strong backfield headlined by Jahmyr Gibbs (RB1) and Saquon Barkley (RB8), but the QB situation is where the wheels start wobbling. Baker Mayfield (QB18) is the nominal starter, yet Mayfield's trajectory is concerning: he barely scraped by as a QB1 in 2025 after a top-five finish the year before, and now he's without Mike Evans, who at least had the decency to be an excuse. Chris Godwin and Emeka Egbuka are decent enough, but consensus projections are skeptical Mayfield recaptures 2024 form, and the fallback is Malik Willis (QB24), which is less a safety net and more a decorative one. Ten chalk picks and two major reaches suggest a drafter who colored mostly inside the lines and still ended up with a picture nobody's hanging on the wall.

EagleAR72 sits at the 56th percentile and seventh in the Gyarados division, which is exactly as unremarkable as it sounds and exactly as dangerous as you want to be. The ceiling here is real: Josh Allen at QB1 anchors the roster, and the Dalton Kincaid stack gives that pairing some connective tissue in the passing game. Drake London at WR7 and Zay Flowers at WR16 are genuine difference-makers on the outside. But the margins cut both ways. The draft was almost entirely chalk, 16 picks at or near consensus value, with no true steals and only D'Andre Swift standing out as anything resembling a discount. That means when projections hold, EagleAR72 is fine. When they don't, there is no draft-day surplus to absorb the shock. Derrick Henry at RB12 and Sam LaPorta at TE8 keep the floor from caving in, but Jakobi Meyers projecting as the weakest starter at WR45 is a reminder that this roster has a back end. In a tournament decided by margins, the back end matters.

After finishing in the 12th percentile last season with a 10-26 record, borgjohn715 has nowhere to go but up, and this roster looks built to do exactly that. The engine is a starting core headlined by Jonathan Taylor (RB4) and CeeDee Lamb (WR5), two top-five players at their positions who alone represent a massive upgrade over whatever was happening in 2025. Jalen Hurts (QB9) and DeVonta Smith (WR14) add a live stack, and Smith's situation may be the most interesting subplot on the roster: with AJ Brown now in New England, Smith finally gets to run the Eagles' receiving room as the unquestioned top option, and the WR14 projection could look conservative if that unlocking is real. Harold Fannin (TE6) rounds out a starting group that projects to the 57th percentile of the field, which is a genuine leap from where this team has been. The roster was drafted almost entirely to consensus value, no clever zigging, but when your top players are this good, chalk is perfectly fine.

Last year's 429ers were a fantasy cautionary tale, finishing in the 11th percentile with 3,862 points and a 10-26 record that made scoreboard-checking feel like a punishment. The 2026 version looks genuinely different. The receiver group is the engine here: Jaxon Smith-Njigba projects as WR3, Nico Collins as WR9, and George Pickens as WR10, a trio that would anchor a contending roster all by itself, with Tetairoa McMillan (WR15) and Garrett Wilson (WR17) extending the depth into legitimate starter territory. The draft supported the vision, too. McMillan fell a full round past his ADP before the 429ers scooped him at pick 5.04, a patient process that generated four value selections overall without a single major reach. The quarterback group is the one honest caveat, with Bryce Young projecting as QB26 leading the room, but in a positionless format the ceiling is set by the top of the roster, not the bottom. At the 62nd percentile, the rebound is already in motion.

There was no single moment where jdm5300 stole the draft, no flashy off-board swing that drew gasps in the chat. Just round after round of coming out slightly ahead. Puka Nacua at WR1 anchors the whole operation, and pairing Brock Purdy with George Kittle gives the roster a built-in connective tissue that other managers simply cannot replicate. The real craftsmanship shows in the body of the draft: De'Von Achane landed at RB6 with a modest edge over his ADP, and Zach Charbonnet slid nearly three rounds past his expected range. Neither move looks like genius in isolation, but that is exactly the point. This roster was built on accumulation, on the quiet discipline of taking the right player at the right price more often than not. The result is a team that projects at the 69th percentile of the field, sitting fourth in the Gyarados division, with the kind of lineup depth that does not announce itself loudly but tends to hold up over a long season.

tonyc1965 didn't need a lightning-bolt move to build one of the more quietly impressive rosters in the Gyarados division, sitting third in the division and at the 73rd percentile of the field after a draft that simply kept coming out ahead on value. The engine of it all is a starting group that includes James Cook (RB5), Justin Jefferson (WR6), and Caleb Williams (QB6), each of them legitimate top-tier options at their position, and what makes them even better is how they were acquired. Williams landed four picks after his average draft position suggested he'd be gone, and T.J. Hockenson slipped a full two rounds, as did Matthew Stafford, both arriving at prices that made the balance sheet look very good by the end. Seven values against zero steals tells you this wasn't a team built on lucky windfalls but on a manager who read the board correctly, again and again. The one blemish, Kirk Cousins taken nearly three rounds early, barely registers against the broader picture. This is a roster that earned its standing the old-fashioned way.

Team fleishmo6 didn't need a lottery ticket to build a contender in the Gyarados division, just a draft that repeatedly squeezed more than market value out of nearly every pick. The headliner is Brock Bowers, the TE1 in the field, landed at pick 1.01 when the market had him going half a round later, a small edge that secured the best player at his position before anyone else could blink. Then Malik Nabers, a projected WR12, fell a full 1.2 rounds past his ADP and landed in fleishmo6's lap at 5.01, the kind of gift that usually goes to luckier managers. Pair Nabers with Jaxson Dart in a quarterback-receiver stack and that value compounds with every game they share a box score. Joe Burrow rounds out a quarterback room that projects as a genuine strength, and the rest of the roster is filled with players taken at or near consensus value, which is exactly the profile of a team that won the draft on aggregate rather than on one inspired swing. Currently sitting second in the division and in the 78th percentile tournament-wide, this roster looks built to stay there.

TE: Mark Andrews (S) (TE14 | $7 | 11.09) ♦

BigE047 didn't win the draft with one thunderous pick. They won it the way a good poker player wins a session, by consistently getting more than they paid for. Jayden Daniels, projected QB5, slid nearly a round and a third past his ADP before BigE047 scooped him up, pairing him alongside Lamar Jackson to form a QB room that grades out as a genuine positional strength. Mark Andrews fell almost three full rounds before landing at pick 11.09, giving BigE047 a TE14 projection at a price that belonged two months earlier in the draft. Kyren Williams quietly added another layer of value, arriving nearly two rounds late at RB15. Stack those three wins together and you have a roster sitting first in the Gyarados division and in the 83rd percentile of the field, which is not an accident. Last season's 34th percentile finish looks like the floor this team is bouncing off of, not a ceiling it is trying to reach. BigE047 simply drafted better than the board expected them to.
