The draft board for zirgrush reads like a cautionary tale told in real time. Four major reaches in a single draft is not bad luck, it is a pattern, and the pattern here points in one direction: a manager who fell in love with a position and kept paying a premium for it long after the market had moved on. Sean Tucker, projected RB65, was taken 5.4 rounds before his ADP. Ray Davis, projected RB62, went nearly three rounds early. Those are not aggressive swings on upside, those are panic buys dressed up as strategy, and the cost shows up in the rest of the roster. The receiver room is anchored by Amon-Ra St. Brown at WR4 and includes Marvin Harrison Jr. at WR33, but the quarterback situation, Jordan Love projected QB17 with Bryce Young at QB26 waiting behind him, is the kind of ceiling that puts a hard cap on scoring weeks when everything else breaks right. Sitting third in the division and in the bottom five percent of the field, this roster is not a work in progress. It is the finished product, and the finished product needs a lot of work.

TE: Brenton Strange (S) (TE17 | $5 | 10.02), Hunter Henry (S) (TE18 | $4 | 9.11)

There is no version of this roster that flatters steeler15, and the draft log makes it worse. The headline asset is real, CeeDee Lamb at WR5 is a genuinely elite foundation, but the rest of the draft reads like a series of bad bets that kept compounding. Matthew Stafford was yanked off the board a full two rounds ahead of his QB14 projection, which is an aggressive price for a quarterback projected to sit outside the top ten. Ted Hurst was taken 5.5 rounds before his ADP, which is not a bold vision play so much as evidence that steeler15 saw something no one else saw and was probably wrong about it. Alec Pierce is a WR32 projection coming off ankle surgery who has never cracked 50 receptions in a season, so his upside in a scoring format that rewards catches is genuinely limited even when healthy, and right now he is not healthy. The 2025 season produced a 9-27 record and a 26th-percentile scoring finish. The 2026 projection lands third in the Dracula division. The pattern is not ambiguous.

TE: Kyle Pitts (S) (TE7 | $20 | 5.07), Isaiah Likely (S) (TE13 | $7 | 10.06)

ColonelAngus65 is sitting 10th in the Dracula division and projected in just the 18th percentile of the field, and the roster explains why without much mystery. The draft was almost entirely chalk, with zero steals, and the two major reaches don't inspire confidence: Kenneth Walker III cost a full round of premium draft capital ahead of his ADP, and Christian Kirk came off the board nearly five rounds early for a player projecting as WR100. Justin Herbert is the most intriguing piece, but intrigue only converts to points under the right conditions, and those conditions keep shifting. Mike McDaniel's arrival in Los Angeles is the most optimistic storyline on the roster, yet Herbert has spent years watching his pass attempts erode as the Chargers became a winning, ball-control team, and nothing in his profile suggests he breaks out of that ceiling with urgency. Jaxon Smith-Njigba at WR3 is a genuine bright spot, but one star doesn't rewrite a bottom-tier outlook. ColonelAngus65 isn't in a rebuild; they're just running out of directions to turn.

Dr. Roto played the value game almost perfectly. Fifteen chalk picks suggest discipline, not laziness, and landing Patrick Mahomes at 7.12 when his ADP sat at 5.08 and snagging C.J. Stroud at 12.01 when the field didn't get there until round nine, those are real wins. The problem is that value at the margins does not fix what ails this roster at the top. Justin Jefferson at WR6 is a genuine anchor, and Garrett Wilson at WR17 holds up, but the projected starters thin out quickly after that, and Khalil Shakir at WR51 is the weakest of the bunch, taken a round and a half early to boot. James Cook at RB5 is legitimate, but Brian Robinson at RB45 is where the depth chart ends at running back. The whole thing projects 27th percentile in the tournament, sitting ninth in the Dracula division, which is the cruelest version of draft success: you beat the board, checked every box, and the roster still doesn't clear the bar.

enusser35 sits eighth in the Dracula Division and around the 40th percentile of the field, and the path forward is genuinely murky. The top of the roster is real: Lamar Jackson at QB3 and Christian McCaffrey at RB3 give this team a legitimate foundation, and Malik Nabers at WR12 keeps the ceiling from caving in entirely. But the draft did this team no favors underneath that tier. Cooper Kupp came off the board more than four rounds ahead of his ADP at WR88, and Jordan James was grabbed nearly four rounds early at RB67, two major reaches that burned late capital on players who rank nowhere near the starting conversation. The wildcard is Dalton Kincaid, projected at TE11 and the kind of consistent contributor who could quietly lift the floor, except Kincaid has spent two years being productive in theory and injured in practice, and Bills GM Brandon Beane was noncommittal this offseason about whether the knee is actually behind him. When your upside hinge is a player whose availability is a coin flip, eighth in the division starts to look optimistic.

TE: Chigoziem Okonkwo (S) (TE19 | $4 | 10.12), David Njoku (TE29 | $1 | 15.01), Colby Parkinson (TE31 | $1 | 16.12)

sully4485 played the draft almost exactly right, and the roster still does not add up. That is the specific cruelty on display here. Almost nothing was taken before its ADP, the board was largely respected, and the haul even includes a legitimate WR2 in Ja'Marr Chase alongside Saquon Barkley at RB8. Those are real building blocks. The problem is that once you scroll past that top tier, the talent thins out fast, and the projected weakest starter tells the whole story: Wan'Dale Robinson at WR47, taken nearly two rounds early at pick 8.12, propping up the back end of a starting lineup that desperately needed more. David Montgomery at RB23 and KC Concepcion at WR50 both came at genuine value, so sully4485 was not asleep at the wheel. The wheel just did not take the team anywhere. A 42nd-percentile tournament ranking and a division rank of seventh suggest that doing things correctly, in this case, was only ever going to be good enough to be mediocre.

TE: Colston Loveland (S) (TE3 | $37 | 3.04)

Living on Burrowed Time didn't chase the room. They just kept winning small, and the roster reflects it. Joe Burrow at QB4 anchors everything, but the real story is how consistently this team came out ahead of the board around him. Jahmyr Gibbs at RB1 is the headliner, and Colston Loveland slipping to TE3 value at pick 3.04 is the kind of quiet win that separates good drafts from great ones. Then there's Bhayshul Tuten, a player with legitimate starter upside now that Travis Etienne has left Jacksonville, projecting at RB25 while the manager grabbed him a full round late. That's not luck, that's homework. Cam Ward falling nearly three rounds past his ADP as a late-round dart at QB23 is the cherry on top of a draft that posted one steal, four values, and zero major reaches. The team sits 6th in the Dracula Division and at the 60th percentile, but this is exactly the kind of well-constructed roster that quietly climbs once the season starts sorting itself out.

CharlieC13 didn't make headlines on draft day, and that's probably why this roster works. The foundation is legitimately strong: Trey McBride at TE2, Tyler Warren at TE4, and Harold Fannin at TE6 headline a starting group that would make most managers in the Dracula division quietly envious, and Warren arriving a full round after his ADP is the kind of quiet efficiency that separates careful drafters from lucky ones. At the top of the depth chart, Caleb Williams projects as QB6 with A.J. Brown at WR8 providing the kind of reliable upside that wins weeks. The draft wasn't flawless, Tyquan Thornton was taken more than six rounds ahead of his ADP, and that stands out on an otherwise measured sheet. But one costly reach doesn't undo a roster that sits at the 65th percentile of the field and features five projected starters projecting inside the top ten at their respective positions. CharlieC13 came out ahead on most exchanges. In a tournament this deep, most isn't nothing.

Dracula's Lament did not build this roster with a single splashy move. They built it by consistently finishing ahead of the board. Drake Maye fell a full round past his ADP and landed at QB2. Brian Thomas Jr. slid more than a round before this team picked him up at WR31. Sam LaPorta came off the board at TE8 pricing when the field was still treating him like a mid-round luxury. Four values across the draft adds up, and the cumulative effect shows up in the projection: a starting corps that includes Brock Bowers at TE1, DeVonta Smith at WR14, Luther Burden at WR22, and Thomas alongside them. The one real blemish is Jeremiyah Love, taken a round and a half before consensus suggested, but Love projects at RB13, so this may be a reach that ages well. Coming off a 76th-percentile scoring season in 2025, Dracula's Lament sits at 71st percentile for 2026, which is not a step backward so much as proof that last year was not a fluke.

skinman1974 sits third in the Dracula division and in the 87th percentile of the entire field, and the draft sheet explains exactly why. This roster was built with patience and precision: five value picks, two outright steals, and just a single minor reach across the whole board. The steal on Dallas Goedert tells the story well. Taken more than three rounds after his ADP, Goedert arrives with recent context working in his favor, having been the one reliable piece of the Philadelphia passing game last season and signing back with the Eagles on a fresh deal. That kind of late-round production can carry a lineup. Pair that with a projected-starter core headlined by Josh Allen at QB1, Omarion Hampton at RB9, and Chase Brown at RB11, and skinman1974 has genuine firepower at the top without having paid a premium to get it. The 2025 record of 16-20 looks like a team that outscored its luck more than it underperformed. The 2026 construction suggests the results will catch up.

TE: Oronde Gadsden (S) (TE16 | $6 | 10.08), Terrance Ferguson (TE28 | $1 | 17.05)

kumarjmh didn't build this roster with one flashy swing, they built it by winning individual battles over and over again. The foundation is genuinely elite: Bijan Robinson at RB2 and De'Von Achane at RB6 give this team a top-end that most managers in the field would envy, and Breece Hall at RB14 is waiting behind them as a projected starter. What makes the draft impressive, though, is how consistently kumarjmh extracted value in the middle and late rounds. D'Andre Swift fell 1.2 rounds past his ADP, Jadarian Price fell 1.7, and Oronde Gadsden slipped a similar margin, all landing in kumarjmh's lap at a discount. The Jayden Daniels and Terry McLaurin stack adds a bonus layer of upside at the top of the lineup. One major reach, Tory Horton at WR93, barely registers as a blemish on a draft that logged five good values and a steal. Sitting second in the Dracula division and projecting to the 96th percentile, this is a team that earned its standing the quiet, methodical way.

The draft sheet on 412to502 looks like a manager who kept jumping the line, and the roster looks like it worked. Three major reaches in the final rounds, Germie Bernard, Elijah Sarratt, and Darnell Washington pulled well ahead of consensus, are the kind of moves that invite easy criticism. But the top of this board is hard to argue with: Puka Nacua projects as WR1, George Pickens as WR10, Chris Olave as WR11, and Ashton Jeanty as RB7, all projected starters, all assembled into a lineup that sits first in the Dracula division and at the 98th tournament percentile. The late-round aggression reads differently when the rest of the draft includes Tucker Kraft falling nearly two rounds to the WR6 pick and Bucky Irving sliding a round and a half to land as a projected RB21. Carnell Tate, the first receiver off the board in the NFL draft and now paired in Tennessee with last year's number one overall pick Cam Ward, adds a WR29 projection with real upside attached. This team is built on conviction. The board called it reaching. The standings say otherwise.
