Scott Fish Bowl Rankings, Analysis, and Team Breakdowns

Rankings are based on actual Scott Fish Bowl ADP from the FantasyLife Scott Fish Bowl tool. Note that in a major tournament like this with nearly 5,000 teams, there are miniscule degrees of separation at play. One player having a breakout season can drastically change a team's results.

These rankings are intended to be entertaining and add in a small way to a wonderful cause. Please consider donating to Fantasy Cares.

As the 2025 fantasy football season looms ominously on the horizon, Team Chris Trapasso (@ChrisTrapasso) finds itself in a position all too familiar and disheartening. Despite last year's modest hopes, the team lurches into this season clinging to the bottom of their division with a dismal record. Running back depth remains a glaring issue, with Bhayshul Tuten, Tyrone Tracy, and Jordan Mason forming a lackluster trio that hardly inspires confidence as the season kicks off. While their wide receiver corps shines with the talents of Nico Collins and Brian Thomas Jr., even these stars cannot fully offset the glaring deficiencies elsewhere on the roster. The strategic misfires during the draft are a haunting specter, as early reaches for key players like Collins and Thomas Jr. have left the team scrambling for balance. Although the value picks of Marvin Mims and Jared Goff provide glimmers of hope, they are unlikely enough to lift the squad from the depths of despair. Last season's dismal 18% win rate and basement-level scoring percentile have cast a long shadow over their prospects, leaving fans bracing for another arduous campaign fraught with frustration and missed opportunities.

As the 2025 fantasy football season looms, Jeff Fish (@CoachFish4) finds itself teetering on the brink of mediocrity, seemingly locked in a struggle against both overwhelming odds and its own lackluster assembly of talent. The echoes of an average 2024 campaign still linger, dragging behind them the heavy chains of an uninspiring roster ranked 11th within their division and languishing in the lowly 8th percentile overall. Jordan Love and Michael Penix Jr. are tasked with steering the ship at quarterback, yet their middling positions offer little confidence in navigating through stormy seas. Josh Jacobs stands alone in the backfield, his solitary strength offering scant hope amidst the team's glaring deficiencies. While the likes of Justin Jefferson and Jaxon Smith-Njigba shine brightly among receivers, the burden falls too heavily on Matthew Golden, a player whose potential seems dimmed as he occupies a pivotal role despite being their weakest link. Drafting missteps have added salt to the wound; while Michael Penix Jr.'s later round pick brings a flicker of value, early reaches for players like Dalton Kincaid and Kendre Miller whisper of desperation rather than strategy. As the team faces the daunting prospect of another fantasy season, the path ahead feels rife with obstacles, casting long shadows over any glimmers of hope.

The War Elephants (@WarElephantsFantasyFB) are strapping on their helmets and gearing up for a season that promises to be as unpredictable as a narwhal in a knitting contest. While they gallop through the mystical land of the SCLSUMudDogs, currently ranked tenth in a division reminiscent of caffeinated sloths competing in synchronized swimming, their tournament journey paints them at a 32nd percentile—right where the unicorns graze with awkward elegance. Their wide receiver trio—Puka Nacua, Malik Nabers, and Tyreek Hill—shines like a disco ball in an otherwise shadowy cave, defying logic by glimmering despite the surrounding chaos. Yet, at tight end, Jake Ferguson perches precariously like a one-legged stork on a windy day, inviting criticism without uttering a word. Meanwhile, Kyren Williams attempts to lead the elephantine stampede from the backfield with Montgomery, Javonte, and Charbonnet following his footsteps like confused ducklings. The War Elephants celebrated acquiring Joshua Palmer with all the stealth of a ninja giraffe but bemoaned their impromptu dance with Raheem Mostert, whose ADP leap should have been choreographed more sensibly. In a twist of fate, C.J. Stroud was snatched later than expected, like a pearl hidden in a clamshell, while the reach for Javonte Williams felt like trying to catch a rainbow with a fishing net. The circus is just beginning, and the War Elephants are determined to make their parade unforgettable, even if it means marching to the beat of their own invisible drummer.

As the 2025 fantasy football season approaches, Dan Meylor (@dmeylor22) stands poised for a potential upswing following a challenging 2024 campaign. Having finished in the bottom fifth percentile for scoring last year and securing victories in just under a third of their matchups, expectations for improvement are cautiously optimistic. Ranked ninth in their division and sitting in the lower third percentile overall, there's room to grow, particularly with a formidable running back lineup led by Jonathan Taylor, James Cook, and Kenneth Walker III, providing solid ground support. Their quarterback situation is less certain, with Justin Herbert offering some stability despite his mid-tier ranking, though Cam Ward's performance remains a potential area of concern. While the wide receiver corps lacks star power, the presence of Stefon Diggs and Jameson Williams offers hope for steady contributions. Brandon Aiyuk, however, emerges as a potential lynchpin; his performance might very well dictate the team's trajectory given his critical role despite being a perceived weak link. The tight end position is where this team truly shines, boasting the strongest lineup in the division with Brock Bowers leading the charge in this TE Premium format. Strategic drafting decisions have brought valuable assets like Herbert at a bargain, but the team will be tested by their reaches on others, including Aiyuk. As the season unfolds, Dan Meylor's journey will hinge on balancing these mixed elements, aiming for a climb up the ranks as they contend with unexpected challenges and opportunities alike.

As the 2025 fantasy football season kicks off, Allan Hepworth (@allanhepworth.bsky.social) finds themselves in an intriguing position. Last year's performance, with a scoring percentile in the teens and a win rate just below 50%, left much to be desired, but there's cautious optimism for this season. The team has its work cut out within its division and in broader competitions, where they currently sit in the 30s percentile and are ranked eighth in their group. Quarterback play remains a point of concern, given the presence of Brock Purdy and Trevor Lawrence, both slightly undervalued in the draft but still positioned outside the top tier of passers. The team's receiving corps, however, offers a beacon of hope. Headlining the unit is Ja'Marr Chase, who promises elite production, complemented by Terry McLaurin and Xavier Worthy, both of whom bring solid support. A pivotal storyline will be Jonnu Smith, the tight end whose importance to the squad cannot be understated. His performance may tip the scales on any given week. Meanwhile, Derrick Henry continues to anchor the backfield, providing a semblance of security despite being picked at a slight discount this year. Draft strategies came with their own set of risks and rewards. While selections like Rashid Shaheed and Sam LaPorta came earlier than consensus opinions might warrant, others like Purdy and Lawrence offer potential upside at their current valuations. Meanwhile, the decision to gamble on players like Jalen Milroe and D'Andre Swift might either prove costly or pay unexpected dividends. In this season of uncertainties, Allan Hepworth's squad is poised to ride the waves of unpredictability, striving to climb both the divisional ranks and the broader competitive spectrum. Whether this ensemble can harness its potential and exceed expectations remains to be seen, but the journey promises to be nothing short of compelling.

As the 2025 fantasy football season kicks off, Sean Kelly (@Pretzelsforall) finds themselves in a precarious position. Although they boast a dynamic duo at quarterback with Lamar Jackson and Jalen Hurts—a tandem that promises explosive potential every week—the rest of the roster presents a mixed bag. Ranking seventh in their division, the team sits in the 45th percentile overall, suggesting they have work to do to climb the standings. The wide receiver corps is solid but not without question marks. A.J. Brown leads the charge as a top option, while Tetairoa McMillan and Calvin Ridley round out a capable unit. Khalil Shakir offers depth, yet Wan'Dale Robinson, despite his crucial role as a starter, presents uncertainty. His performance could be pivotal, either bridging the gap to elevate the team's standing or highlighting their vulnerabilities. Draft strategy plays a key role here. Securing Jalen Hurts slightly beyond his average draft position hints at a savvy move, yet the significant reach for Jerome Ford and Noah Fant might cause headaches. The stack of A.J. Brown and Jalen Hurts should provide some strategic synergy, offering hope that this calculated gamble pays dividends. As the season unfolds, much will depend on the consistency of Robinson and the ability of these quarterbacks to deliver. With potential for upward movement, the focus will be on finding the right balance between calculated risks and steady performances.

As the 2025 fantasy football season kicks off, Kevin Sesny (@KEVSEZ68) stands at a pivotal point in their campaign. With a division rank of 6 and positioned in the 47th percentile overall, there's both room for optimism and cause for caution. The team's strength appears to be anchored by their quarterback duo, Joe Burrow and Baker Mayfield, both of whom are poised to deliver big plays and steady points. Tight end depth is another significant asset, particularly with the TE Premium setup in place. George Kittle and T.J. Hockenson lead this formidable group, promising consistent performance each week. However, the wide receiver lineup could pose challenges, as Tee Higgins, Chris Godwin, and Cooper Kupp may struggle to consistently produce under current conditions, potentially leaving the team vulnerable in high-scoring matchups. Running back Saquon Barkley is expected to be a workhorse, but Tyjae Spears' role is crucial; his performance might very well determine whether the team can climb the ranks or remain stagnant. The draft strategy brought some interesting dynamics: while securing Mike Gesicki later than anticipated could prove advantageous, reaching for players like Brian Robinson and MarShawn Lloyd adds an element of uncertainty to the roster. With strategic insights and perhaps a bit of luck, Kevin Sesny (@KEVSEZ68) could find themselves climbing the standings and making a notable impact this season.

As the 2025 fantasy football season kicks off, Stephen Johnson (@Stephen_Roto) is poised for an exciting run, blending youthful energy with strategic draft moves. Ranked 5th in their division and sitting comfortably in the 62nd percentile overall, this team is set to make waves thanks largely to their formidable running back lineup. With Bijan Robinson leading the charge as the top-ranked RB1 and a solid supporting cast featuring Chase Brown and Breece Hall, this team's ground game is unmatched in their division. While the wide receiver and tight end positions present some challenges, the youthful vigor and potential for breakout performances offer plenty of room for growth. Caleb Williams was a savvy draft pick, adding depth and future promise to the roster. Meanwhile, Rhamondre Stevenson, though a bit of a question mark, could surprise everyone with a strong season that elevates the team's performance further. If the younger players like Bryce Young can develop quickly and the running backs deliver as expected, Stephen Johnson has the potential to climb the ranks and make a significant impact this season.

As the 2025 fantasy football season kicks off, Joe Tittermary (@JoeTittermary) stands poised for an exciting campaign, bringing a well-balanced mix of talent and strategic drafting to the forefront. With an impressive wide receiver core featuring stars like CeeDee Lamb and Drake London, the team boasts unmatched depth at this position in their division. Their adeptness in securing players like Dak Prescott and Deebo Samuel at great value during the draft showcases their keen understanding of timing and potential. Despite some challenges at the quarterback position, where they rely on Prescott alongside Tua Tagovailoa, Anthony Richardson, and Sam Darnold, Joe Tittermary's roster is fortified by a formidable receiving group that promises to light up the scoreboards. Ashton Jeanty adds a dynamic element in the backfield, providing essential support alongside veteran James Conner. As they enter a competitive season, currently ranked 4th in their division and within the 70th percentile overall, their strategy hinges on leveraging their stacked receiving lineup while finding hidden gems among their late-round acquisitions. This team is certainly one to watch, as they blend shrewd drafts with explosive playmakers, aiming for success against a field teeming with contenders.

As the 2025 fantasy football season dawns, Jay Felicio (@GmenJay) stands poised on the precipice of gridiron glory, weaving a tapestry of anticipation and awe across the fantasy realm. This squad has carved its place among the elite, boasting a commanding position within the top echelon of competitors. Anchored by the dynamic duo of Josh Allen, a quarterback snatched well beyond expectation, and the burgeoning talent of Jayden Daniels, their aerial assault is unrivaled in the division. While the receiving corps may appear modest with Marvin Harrison Jr. and Rome Odunze leading the charge, it is the formidable assembly of tight ends that truly elevates this team's stature in the TE Premium format. Tyler Warren, Colston Loveland, Evan Engram, alongside the enigmatic Kyle Pitts and the versatile Isaiah Likely, form a phalanx of potential unmatched by their peers. Despite a middling ground game spearheaded by Bucky Irving and Joe Mixon, and some strategic gambles in the draft like Tank Bigsby and Rico Dowdle, Jay Felicio's foresight in securing late-round gems has solidified their strategic mastery. As whispers of strategy and synergy ripple through the SCLSUMudDogs division, one cannot help but sense a season of destiny unfurling for Jay Felicio (@GmenJay), where each play is a brushstroke on the canvas of a championship campaign.

As the 2025 fantasy football season kicks off, James Brandt (@FFTheBeard) stands poised for an electrifying campaign, ranking second in their division and impressively within the 98th percentile overall. The team boasts a spectacular lineup of wide receivers, with stars like Amon-Ra St. Brown and Garrett Wilson leading the charge, offering both reliability and explosive potential. Complementing them are seasoned talents like Mike Evans and DeVonta Smith, adding depth and versatility to the receiving corps. In this tight end premium setup, Trey McBride shines as a formidable force, supported by veteran Zach Ertz, whose experience could be pivotal despite his lower projection. Despite the team's relative struggles at running back, Christian McCaffrey remains a stalwart presence, while Najee Harris is expected to contribute key performances. James Brandt's strategic acumen is evident in their savvy draft picks, securing great value with J.J. McCarthy and George Pickens, while Mike Evans was a noteworthy acquisition well below his ADP. Although a couple of picks might have been reached on, the overall strength of the roster positions this team as a formidable contender, ready to make waves in their pursuit of fantasy glory.

As the 2025 fantasy football season kicks off, Earl English (@eeenglish1) stands poised for a triumphant comeback, surging from their previous underwhelming finish to become a formidable force in both their division and the broader competitive landscape. This team has skyrocketed to the pinnacle of the rankings, currently sitting at the top of their division and within the elite 99th percentile overall, thanks to strategic drafting and a powerhouse roster. Fueled by an enviable running back core featuring Jahmyr Gibbs and De'Von Achane, supported by Alvin Kamara's reliable presence, Earl English boasts unparalleled depth and versatility in the backfield. While their wide receiver lineup may not lead the pack, Rashee Rice's synergy with Patrick Mahomes offers an electrifying promise of high-octane performances each week, further complemented by Jaylen Waddle's explosive potential. Despite some challenges at the tight end position, the team's quarterback strategy shines brightly, having secured Patrick Mahomes and Aaron Rodgers with exceptional draft value, alongside the savvy addition of Drake Maye well below his expected selection. As they prepare to eclipse last year's setbacks, Earl English is a prime example of how meticulous planning and sharp foresight can turn a fantasy team into a championship contender.
