There is no charitable read available for WeDemBoyz017, a team sitting at the bottom of the Zelda division and in the 12th percentile of the field after a draft that looked less like a strategy and more like a series of panicked decisions. The clearest evidence is the reach pattern: four major reaches in a single draft, including Tony Pollard taken a staggering 3.1 rounds before his ADP and Jake Ferguson pulled in 2.4 rounds early at a position that almost never warrants that kind of capital. Those two picks alone cost this team the positional equity that might have produced real depth. CeeDee Lamb at WR5 and Drake London at WR7 give the roster a legitimate top end, and London was genuinely a steal, falling 1.6 rounds past his ADP. But a team that burns mid-round selections chasing a TE12 and a late-starting running back is a team that has already decided to hope rather than build, and hope, as the 12th-percentile projection confirms, is not a draft strategy.

Six major reaches across a 20-round draft is not a pattern, it is a policy, and Monty85 followed it with grim consistency. The most damning example is Caleb Williams, snagged nearly a full round ahead of his ADP at QB6 when Josh Allen was already locked in as the anchor, a redundancy that cost real capital and delivered a starter who projects as a middling QB6. The receiver group tells the same story in slower motion: Rome Odunze landed more than two rounds early, Zachariah Branch arrived nearly four rounds ahead of schedule, and the projected starter at the position is Jayden Reed at WR48, a number that does not inspire confidence. Marvin Harrison Jr. is theoretically the wild card, but he is heading into a season with Jacoby Brissett under center in Arizona, which is less a lifeline than a philosophical position on suffering. The result is a team sitting 11th in the Zelda Division and projecting in the bottom quarter of the field, which is exactly where a draft built on wishful ADP math tends to land.

TE: AJ Barner (TE24 | $2 | 13.11)

The Wind Waker finished 29th percentile in scoring last season and the 2026 outlook is bleaker, projecting 10th in the Zelda Division and just 18th percentile in the field. The receiver room is genuinely impressive on paper, with Amon-Ra St. Brown at WR4 and Justin Jefferson at WR6 anchoring a group that runs deep, but impressive receivers only carry you so far when the rest of the roster is fighting gravity. The real damage was done in the draft, where the team logged zero steals, zero true value picks, and burned precious capital on reaches like Jakobi Meyers, pulled at 5.11 against an ADP of 10.03, four rounds early for a player who projects as a WR45. That is not a calculated gamble on upside, that is paying luxury-suite prices for a seat in the upper deck. With AJ Barner projecting as a TE24 and the backfield anchored by Omarion Hampton at RB9 but fading fast after that, the margin for error here was already thin before the draft made it thinner. There is no obvious lever left to pull.

TE: Tucker Kraft (S) (TE5 | $23 | 4.11) ♦, Theo Johnson (TE37 | $0 | 15.02), Justin Joly (TE- | $0 | 20.11)

There is no painless way to spin a 20th-percentile projection and a ninth-place divisional standing, and coachJLO probably knows it. The receiver group is legitimately strong, anchored by Puka Nacua at WR1 and supported by a deep chain of contributors, but that strength runs headlong into a draft that logged three major reaches, including Matthew Stafford taken more than three rounds ahead of his ADP and Xavier Worthy gobbled up nearly two and a half rounds early. Stafford stacks with Nacua, which is a real ceiling-raiser, but paying a second-round price for a QB14 when the market valued him in round six is the kind of math that compresses a roster's floor in a hurry. The result is a team that looks presentable on paper until you notice Worthy sitting as the projected weakest starter and last year's 42-percent win rate still echoing underneath everything. coachJLO can point to a WR1 and hope the stack fires, but hope is not a roster strategy, and the standings table in the Zelda division does not seem inclined to wait around.

McCadeP8 sits eighth in the Zelda division and down in the 25th percentile of the field, and the roster tells you exactly why. The receiver group is the obvious culprit: Davante Adams leads it at WR25, with Courtland Sutton at WR37 right behind him, and that is where the upside runs dry. In a positionless format where you need your top players to carry real weight, projecting Adams as your best pass-catcher is a quiet crisis. The draft board did not help matters. Jalen Hurts, a key projected starter, was taken 1.2 rounds ahead of his ADP, and Josh Jacobs, projected at RB16, now carries serious real-world uncertainty after an offseason arrest stemming from a domestic violence situation, with charges still unsettled and his availability far from guaranteed. Jahmyr Gibbs at RB1 is genuinely elite and could drag this team through a few tough weeks, but one transcendent player is not a roster construction strategy, it is a lifeline, and lifelines eventually run out.

TE: Tyler Warren (S) (TE4 | $31 | 2.09), Brenton Strange (TE17 | $5 | 11.04), Colby Parkinson (TE31 | $1 | 16.09)

The Joe Reed Experience enters 2026 sitting seventh in the Zelda division and in just the 28th tournament percentile, and the draft record does not offer much reason for optimism. Patrick Mahomes looks like the centerpiece of this roster, but pulling him at pick 3.04 against an ADP of 5.08 means the manager paid a steep premium for a QB12 projection, burning early capital on a player whose value is already baked in at that cost. The rest of the build leans heavily on chalk, with 12 of the team's picks coming right at consensus. Bijan Robinson is a legitimate RB2 anchor and Tyler Warren projects as a TE4, so the floor is not nonexistent, but the supporting cast thins quickly. Michael Wilson grades out as the weakest projected starter at WR39, and late-round longshots like Jaylin Noel and Chimere Dike were taken before their ADPs rather than after, which means even the speculative swings were not getting good prices. There is no obvious lever left to pull here, just a group that graded out near the bottom and a draft that reinforced the ceiling rather than raised it.

TE: Hunter Henry (S) (TE18 | $4 | 7.10), Dalton Schultz (S) (TE22 | $3 | 9.10)

shumway76peter sits at 36th percentile and sixth in the Zelda Division, which is exactly the kind of standing that demands perfection from the margins because the core alone won't carry it. The core is legitimately good: Christian McCaffrey at RB3 and Jonathan Taylor at RB4 give this roster a foundation that most managers in this field would trade for without hesitation, and George Pickens at WR10 adds a third genuinely scary name to the lineup. The problem is what surrounds them. Six major reaches in the draft is not a philosophy, it is a gamble, and the late-roster spots are stuffed with names like Kayshon Boutte, Elijah Sarratt, and Cooper Kupp that were all taken well before the market agreed they were worth drafting. KC Concepcion projects as the weakest starter on the roster, and Baker Mayfield at QB18 is functional but forgettable. If McCaffrey, Taylor, and Pickens all hit their projections and a few of those reaches surprise, this team sneaks up the standings. If they don't, the margins will swallow shumway76peter whole.

TheRealMcSpanky didn't win the draft with one thunderbolt pick. They won it by being right, over and over again, in the rounds where most managers go sideways. Chris Olave at WR11 slid a full round and a half past his ADP before McSpanky scooped him in the fifth. Colston Loveland, projected TE3, fell nearly half a round to the back of the second before landing here. Neither pick required brilliance, just the patience to let the board come to you and the conviction to pull the trigger when it did. Brock Bowers at TE1 is the kind of foundational piece that makes roster construction forgiving everywhere else, and surrounding him with Rashee Rice at WR13 and Tee Higgins at WR19 means this lineup can put up points in a hurry. The one blemish is Quentin Johnston, reached two and a half rounds early and sitting as the projected weakest starter at WR41. That one pick aside, this is a draft that graded out quietly excellent, and 50th percentile feels like a floor rather than a ceiling.

TE: Dalton Kincaid (S) (TE11 | $10 | 7.09), Terrance Ferguson (TE28 | $1 | 14.04)

texanskier didn't torch the board with a single flashy move, just drafted smarter than most people in the room, round after round. The clearest example: Nico Collins fell a full 1.4 rounds past his ADP, and texanskier was right there to take WR9 at pick 4.04. That's the kind of patient opportunism that separates competent drafters from good ones. Garrett Wilson arriving in the sixth round as WR17 tells the same story. On the other side of the ledger, Joe Burrow going at 1.09 was a genuine reach, nearly a full round ahead of where the market had him, so texanskier gave up real capital to lock in QB4 before everyone else could. Whether that's a flaw or a philosophy is debatable, but the overall shape of this roster sits at 57th percentile in the field, with Lamar Jackson and Burrow anchoring the QB room and a core of projected starters that holds up. This is a team built to grind out a winning record, not a long shot hoping to catch lightning.

RB: James Cook (S) (RB5 | $40 | 2.06), Saquon Barkley (S) (RB8 | $32 | 3.07), Breece Hall (S) (RB14 | $23 | 6.06), Jadarian Price (S) (RB26 | $5 | 10.06), Chuba Hubbard (RB29 | $4 | 11.07), Zach Charbonnet (RB42 | $1 | 15.07), Chris Rodriguez (RB48 | $0 | 16.06)

WR: Jaxon Smith-Njigba (S) (WR3 | $55 | 1.07), Zay Flowers (S) (WR16 | $24 | 4.06), Khalil Shakir (WR51 | $3 | 13.07), Jerry Jeudy (WR66 | $1 | 18.06), Troy Franklin (WR80 | $0 | 19.07)

TE: Travis Kelce (S) (TE10 | $11 | 8.06), Isaiah Likely (S) (TE13 | $7 | 9.07), Greg Dulcich (TE25 | $2 | 14.06), David Njoku (TE29 | $1 | 17.07)

RusticCitrus sits third in the Zelda Division and in the 93rd percentile of the field, and neither number feels like an accident. The draft tells the story cleanly: zero reaches across the entire board, five good values, and two steals that look almost unfair in hindsight. Jerry Jeudy fell three full rounds past his ADP and landed at 18.06. David Njoku slipped nearly three rounds and got scooped at 17.07. Those are the kinds of gifts that separate disciplined managers from lucky ones, and RusticCitrus earned both by simply staying patient. Up front, the lineup is anchored by James Cook at RB5 and Saquon Barkley at RB8, both projected starters alongside Jaxon Smith-Njigba at WR3 and Breece Hall at RB14. Travis Kelce at TE10 gives the roster an elite floor at the position. If there is a question mark anywhere, it is probably Jadarian Price at RB26 as the weakest projected starter, but on a roster this carefully constructed, that is a very short list of concerns.

HockeyZachA sits at 95th percentile in the field and second in the Zelda Division, and the draft record tells you exactly why: three values, one steal, and almost no reaches to speak of. The foundation here is genuinely impressive. Drake Maye lands as QB2, and with AJ Brown now in New England giving him the alpha receiver he never had, the ceiling on that investment looks even higher than the rank suggests. Pair Maye with Trey McBride at TE2, Kyle Pitts at TE7, and George Kittle at TE9, and HockeyZachA is fielding elite production at the top of the lineup night after night. Kittle, notably, was a value grab, falling a full round past his ADP. De'Von Achane at RB6 arrived the same way, sliding more than a round before HockeyZachA stepped in. That is the whole story here: a manager who showed up with a plan, waited out the board, and collected talent without overpaying. Clean drafts do not guarantee championships, but they put you in the conversation, and this one absolutely does.

TE: Kenyon Sadiq (S) (TE21 | $3 | 11.06), Eli Stowers (TE32 | $1 | 14.07)

There are drafts that look clean in hindsight and drafts that look clean in real time. kshum33's 2026 SFB build is the second kind. Landing Ja'Marr Chase at WR2 in the first round is good. Landing Malik Nabers at WR12 when the board had him going nearly two full rounds earlier is better. Then doing the same with A.J. Brown, pulling a WR8 at a discount, and the picture becomes clear: this is a manager who knows what things are worth and waits for the market to slip. The Brock Purdy value is the punctuation mark, a QB13 sitting on the board until round eight while Jayden Daniels, already a projected starter and stacked with Terry McLaurin, anchors the passing game. The 2025 résumé, a 75 percent win rate and an 88th-percentile scoring season, suggests none of this is accidental. Division-leading, 99th-percentile positioning, four confirmed values and a steal, almost nothing reached on. kshum33 did not stumble into a good roster. They built one.
