TE: Sam LaPorta (S) (TE8 | $17 | 6.02) ♦, T.J. Hockenson (S) (TE23 | $2 | 12.02)

The Bipolar Bears spent seventeen rounds confirming what round two already suggested. Taking A.J. Brown at 2.02 when his ADP sat at 2.10 is forgivable, barely, but it set the tone for a draft that never course-corrected. From there, the reaches compounded into something almost impressive in its consistency: Rhamondre Stevenson pulled 3.4 rounds before his ADP, Rashid Shaheed cost 3.2 rounds of premium, and Dontayvion Wicks, a WR96, was drafted nearly four rounds early as if urgency itself had replaced strategy. Six major reaches across one draft is not bad luck, it is a philosophy, and this philosophy has produced a roster sitting dead last in Watch Dogs 2. Drake Maye gives the team a real foundation at QB2, and the Maye-Brown stack has genuine upside, but the surrounding cast was assembled at prices that assumed a market that does not exist. When your weakest projected starter is Kyle Monangai at RB33, and you burned the capital to get there on Stevenson and Jonathon Brooks at full panic-buy rates, the math does not forgive you.

Kenneth Walker Tx Ranger sits 11th in Watch Dogs 2 and in the 12th percentile of the field, and the draft record offers little reason to expect a turnaround. Not a single steal or value on the board, fifteen picks at chalk, and the two most aggressive moves of the draft both missed the mark: Rashee Rice was taken 1.2 rounds ahead of his ADP, and Oronde Gadsden was grabbed a full 2.5 rounds early, meaning this team spent real capital to acquire a TE16 and a WR13 when the market was prepared to deliver comparable value later. The receiver corps does carry genuine upside, with Ja'Marr Chase projecting as WR2 and Jameson Williams at WR21 among the starters, but the rest of the roster grades out as thoroughly mediocre. Ty Simpson sits at QB36, Hunter Henry anchors the tight end group at TE18, and there is no obvious trade asset or lottery ticket left to flip. This roster is not rebuilding, it is simply behind, and the schedule does not care.

Los Pollos Hermanos sits 10th in Watch Dogs 2 and in just the 17th percentile of the field, and the roster gives very little reason to argue with either number. The foundation is not worthless, Jahmyr Gibbs (RB1) is genuinely elite and Nico Collins (WR9) and Tee Higgins (WR19) give the team real firepower at the top. But the quarterback situation is where this team starts to quietly collapse. Jordan Love (QB17) is the kind of signal-caller who makes NFL analysts nod approvingly and fantasy managers stare at the ceiling at midnight. He limits turnovers, he wins games, and he has never once rewarded his fantasy managers with a top-10 season. The Packers keep promising a more pass-heavy approach, but Tucker Kraft (TE5) is returning from a late ACL injury and Green Bay still lacks a true alpha receiver, so Love's upside remains firmly theoretical. Alec Pierce (WR32), taken nearly three full rounds before his ADP, is the kind of gamble that looks fine in August and painful by November. This team needed everything to break right, and the roster construction suggests it probably won't.

Strange Pick'ns sits at 22nd percentile and ninth in the division, and the draft record explains exactly how it got there: no steals, no values, fourteen chalk picks, and five reaches, three of them major. In a positionless format where value accumulation is the entire game, this roster never accumulated any. The most glaring evidence is the late-round receiver spending, where Jaylin Noel came off the board four-plus rounds before his ADP of 19.02, and Elijah Sarratt followed three-plus rounds early, and neither projects as a starter. That is real draft capital evaporating on WR83 and WR98 while the backfield settled for Chuba Hubbard as the projected best option. Josh Allen is genuinely great, and the Allen/Dalton Kincaid stack gives this team a real ceiling, but one QB1 cannot paper over a construction process that looked, from the outside, like someone panic-drafted positions they already had depth at while the board handed out free money elsewhere. The Scott Fish Bowl rewards discipline. Strange Pick'ns spent it like a gift card with an expiration date.

McLaurin F1 sits at 28th percentile in the field and eighth in the Watch Dogs 2 division, and the roster construction explains why. The draft tells the story plainly: two major reaches and zero steals, with Jaxson Dart taken 1.8 rounds before his ADP at QB11 and Evan Engram scooped up 4.4 rounds early at TE36. Paying a premium for a QB11 and a TE36 is a strange way to spend draft capital, and the projected lineup shows the cost. The receiver group grades out weak, topped by Terry McLaurin at WR24 and Carnell Tate at WR29, neither of whom moves the needle at the tournament level. Christian McCaffrey at RB3 and James Cook at RB5 are legitimate, and Harold Fannin at TE6 offers real upside, but the supporting cast fades quickly, with RJ Harvey projecting as the weakest starter at RB28. This roster has a ceiling, a hard one, and the path to climbing out of the division basement is not obvious from where things currently stand.

Padres>Giants ran a clean draft, which makes the prognosis all the more dispiriting. Sixteen chalk picks, two values, zero major reaches, and the roster still lands in the 28th percentile of the field. The value column tells the story plainly: Geno Smith at QB30 and Courtland Sutton at WR37 fell past their ADPs and got scooped up, and neither one moves the needle enough to matter. The real issue is at the top. Amon-Ra St. Brown at WR4 and Drake London at WR7 give this team a legitimate upper tier, but Sam Darnold at QB21 is the projected starter under center, and that ceiling drops fast. You drafted correctly and still ended up here, which is what makes this roster feel less like a bad decision and more like a bad outcome. Finishing 7th in the Watch Dogs 2 division while the draft board cooperated is the cruelest kind of losing. The process was sound. The result is not.

Dirty Trombones are parked right at the tournament's equator, 46th percentile, sixth in Watch Dogs 2, the kind of team that wins the weeks it should and loses the weeks it shouldn't and finishes two games from a playoff spot wondering what happened. What happened is the margins. Jonathan Taylor at RB4 is a genuine difference-maker, and Trey McBride at TE2 is the sort of positional advantage that quietly compounds across a long season. But the roster's fate lives somewhere in the middle tier, where Parker Washington projects as a WR35 despite arriving at that rank through the strangest possible path: outpacing Brian Thomas Jr. and Travis Hunter for targets on a team that, by all evidence, would prefer not to be starting him. Whether that continues is a real question. The Kaelon Black reach at RB71, taken nearly nine rounds ahead of his ADP, looks like the kind of late-round swing that either looks prophetic or just looks late. Purdy and Derrick Henry keep the floor honest. The ceiling depends on what Washington actually is.

The Monstars built something real here, and the draft log will confuse people who look at it too closely. Thirteen chalk picks, two minor reaches, two major reaches, zero steals. On paper, this manager was perpetually ahead of the room. In practice, they wound up with CeeDee Lamb at WR5 and Justin Jefferson at WR6 anchoring a starting group that also includes DeVonta Smith at WR14 and Jordyn Tyson at WR34. That is not a lucky accident of the format, that is a well-constructed core. The reaches are real, Tua Tagovailoa at QB31 pulled 2.8 rounds early and Tyquan Thornton at WR97 cost a pick that almost certainly had better options sitting on the board, but neither one does meaningful damage to a lineup this stacked at the top. Justin Herbert at QB8 and Patrick Mahomes at QB12 give the team legitimate flexibility at the position. The 58th percentile tournament projection feels conservative given the top-end talent here, and the Watch Dogs 2 division rank of fifth feels like an invitation to prove something. Conviction and luck often look identical in October.

VarsityBluefs didn't need a single lightning-bolt pick to build something worth watching in Watch Dogs 2. The foundation starts at the top, where Joe Burrow at QB4 and Brock Bowers at TE1 give this roster a ceiling most managers would trade half their depth to own. From there, the draft tells a quiet story of consistent execution: Malik Nabers fell nearly two rounds past his ADP into the lap of a manager ready to take him, and Josh Downs arrived at a similar discount in the double-digit rounds when he was still on the board past where the market expected him to go. Fourteen chalk picks across the roster could sound uninspiring, but chalk at the right price points is just competence wearing a boring outfit. Saquon Barkley at RB8 and Jeremiyah Love at RB13 anchor a backfield group that projects as squarely average by position rating, which undersells how much those top names contribute. This team lands at the 80th percentile for a reason, and it wasn't one lucky swing that got them there.

There are rosters built wide and rosters built deep, and I Love Bijan Mustard is the case study for what the second kind looks like when it works. In a positionless format where you simply field your best players, stacking elite talent at quarterback, running back, and tight end is not a strategic quirk, it is the strategy. Lamar Jackson at QB3 and Bijan Robinson at RB2 are the kind of projected starters that win weeks outright, and Colston Loveland at TE3 slots in behind them as both a legitimate scorer and a natural stack partner with Caleb Williams at QB6. Williams himself fell nearly two rounds past his ADP, which means this team landed a QB6 at a discount and barely had to pay for it. The one asterisk worth noting is George Kittle, who tore his Achilles in the 2025 NFL playoffs and projects as a TE9 if healthy, a meaningful if. But even accounting for Kittle's uncertainty, this roster sits at the 98th percentile of the field, third in the division, and built exactly the way you want to be built when position scarcity simply does not apply.

Label Lickers didn't need a miracle pick to land at the 98th percentile of the field, they just needed to be right more often than wrong, and they were. Five players fell past their ADP into this roster, including Breece Hall dropping nearly two full rounds to round six and Marvin Harrison Jr. sliding more than a round to let Label Lickers grab a projected WR33 starter in round nine. The Stafford-Nacua stack ties the room together neatly, and Matthew Stafford comes with legitimate upside: Trevor Lawrence's career year showed that Jaguars receivers not named the presumed alpha can lead the team in yardage, which is exactly the kind of quiet productivity that fantasy managers undervalue until it's too late. Lawrence himself checks in as the QB10 starter on this roster, giving the team a credible ceiling at the position. The weakest projected starter is Tony Pollard at RB30, which in a positionless format that starts ten players is less a concern than a reminder of how well-constructed the rest of this thing is. Watch Dogs 2 should take notice.

The Porkchop Express sits atop Watch Dogs 2 and in the 99th percentile of the field, and the draft sheet tells you exactly why. This roster is clean. Zero reaches, three values, and a steal headlining the whole operation: Jayden Daniels, projected QB5, fell more than two full rounds past his ADP before landing here at 5.05. That is the kind of gift that makes a draft. Pair him with a backfield anchored by De'Von Achane (RB6) and Kenneth Walker III (RB10), and the top of this lineup has genuine teeth. Then there is Luther Burden, snagged 1.4 rounds late despite arriving in 2026 as one of the most anticipated breakout candidates in fantasy. Ben Johnson is comparing him to Amon-Ra St. Brown, and Burden's second-half 2025 numbers, once he carved out a real snap share in Chicago, suggest the hype is grounded in something real. The Porkchop Express did not get lucky. They were disciplined, they found value without forcing it, and the board rewarded them for it.
