MaTEria Girl is staring down a brutal 2026 campaign, and the numbers offer very little comfort. The team sits 12th in the Sephiroth Division and projects in just the fourth percentile of the field, which means this roster is not unlucky or misunderstood, it is simply outgunned. The brightest name on the sheet is Trey McBride at TE2, and the group behind him is legitimately deep, but the scoring ceiling is strangled by a quarterback situation that reads like a cry for help. C.J. Stroud, the nominal starter at QB22, has been backsliding for two years after a promising debut, and behind him sits Jacoby Brissett at QB28 and Tua Tagovailoa at QB31. There is no obvious upgrade waiting in the wings, and the draft board did not help matters: five minor reaches and two major ones, with Harold Fannin taken 2.1 rounds early and Jake Ferguson nearly 3.2 rounds ahead of his ADP. When your roster's weakest projected starter is Hunter Henry at TE18, you are probably building the wrong direction entirely.

TequilaOperator enters 2026 sitting 11th in the Sephiroth Division and in the 8th percentile of the field, and the draft record explains exactly how they got there: three major reaches, five minor reaches, eight chalk picks, and not a single steal. The two good values on the board were Josh Allen and Omar Cooper Jr., which means the one genuinely good thing that happened to this roster was Allen falling seven spots. The damage accumulates fast after that. Sam LaPorta was yanked two full rounds ahead of his ADP in round four, before the draft had any reason to panic on tight ends, and Michael Pittman was scooped more than two rounds early at WR44, a projection that does not scream urgency. Meanwhile, Drake Maye arrives in 2026 with legitimate weapons after New England added AJ Brown in the offseason, and TequilaOperator has him as a projected starter, but Maye alone cannot carry a roster assembled like this. The foundation was cracked before a single game was played.

TE:

Last year, Justin Time 4 the Reunion went 28-8 and scored in the 96th percentile, which is the kind of season that earns a manager genuine respect walking into a draft room. This year, that reputation is doing a lot of heavy lifting. The roster is built almost entirely around a receiver group headlined by Justin Jefferson (WR6), Nico Collins (WR9), and George Pickens (WR10), a genuinely elite top end, but the quarterback situation behind those names is Baker Mayfield (QB18) and Kyler Murray (QB19), and the draft process itself raises flags: three major reaches, including Calvin Ridley taken nearly three rounds early and Malachi Fields nearly three rounds early in the late rounds, suggest a manager chasing upside that wasn't there at those prices. The tournament is projecting this team 10th in the Sephiroth division and in the 13th percentile of the field. That is not a continuation of 2025. That is a correction, and watching a 96th-percentile reputation collide with a 13th-percentile projection is quietly the saddest story on this side of the bracket.

TE: Chigoziem Okonkwo (S) (TE19 | $4 | 10.05), Mike Gesicki (TE33 | $0 | 17.08)

JoeMetz34 finished 71st percentile in scoring last year and still lands at 19th percentile heading into 2026, which tells you most of what you need to know about how the field has moved on without them. The receiver group is genuinely impressive, Amon-Ra St. Brown at WR4, Drake London at WR7, and Chris Olave at WR11 form a top line that any manager would envy, but the rest of the roster offers very little margin for error. The two quarterbacks check in at QB36 and QB37, and reaching 3.6 rounds early on Ty Simpson suggests the position was an afterthought right up until it became a problem. Parker Washington adds some intrigue as a projected starter, but his path to consistent production in Jacksonville depends on organizational will as much as talent, and "organizational will" is not something you want to gamble a season on. There is no obvious move to make here, no buried asset waiting to break out. This roster is what it is, and what it is sits ninth in the Sephiroth division.

dffornek did nearly everything right at the draft table. Caleb Williams fell almost a full round, RJ Harvey slid nearly two, and Jaxson Dart tumbled more than two full rounds before dffornek scooped him at 7.11, making him the clearest value on the board. That is a disciplined, patient draft, the kind that should produce a roster humming with surplus value. Instead, the team sits at 28th percentile and eighth in the Sephiroth division, which is the specific cruelty of fantasy football: being correct and being rewarded are not the same transaction. The starting group is anchored by Jonathan Taylor at RB4 and Colston Loveland at TE3, with Williams and Loveland offering a genuine stack, but the projected starters thin out quickly after that. DeVonta Smith at WR14 is a real contributor, and then the depth behind her fades into a long tail of WR55-and-beyond options. dffornek read the board well. The board just did not have enough to read.

TE: T.J. Hockenson (TE23 | $2 | 12.03), Terrance Ferguson (TE28 | $1 | 16.03), Theo Johnson (TE37 | $0 | 14.03)

Jenovas Juggernauts sit at the 44th percentile, which is exactly as comfortable as it sounds: close enough to the middle that every week feels negotiable, far enough from the top that nothing is free. The roster is built around a legitimate ceiling, Joe Burrow (QB4) and CeeDee Lamb (WR5) are the kind of names that win matchups outright, but Burrow's ceiling has a trapdoor under it. He missed most of 2025 with a grade-3 turf toe, returned in Week 13, and still projected out to a QB4 pace. The talent is real. The durability question is just as real, and in a margins season, a manager cannot afford to spend the first half of the year waiting on his franchise piece to heal. Brock Purdy (QB13) offers a credible bridge, taken well past his ADP in a quiet steal of a draft. The supporting cast, Saquon Barkley (RB8), Malik Nabers (WR12), is legitimately good. This team does not lose the room. It just has to avoid losing Burrow.

acclimative didn't build this roster on one flashy gamble. They built it by repeatedly getting reasonable players at reasonable prices and occasionally getting genuinely good players at bargain ones. The headliner is Jaxon Smith-Njigba, a WR3 projection that gives this team a legitimate top-end weapon other managers will envy all season. Pair him with Jaylen Waddle at WR23 and Tucker Kraft at TE5, and the projected starters carry real weight before you even get to the depth. The draft's defining moment of patience came late, when Jared Goff fell to the sixth pick of the eighth round despite projecting as a QB16, a gap of more than two full rounds between perception and reality. That kind of quiet competence ran through the whole board. Yes, there were two major reaches, Tyquan Thornton and Jake Tonges, but neither is a projected starter, so those risks stay safely in the background. At 70th percentile in the field, acclimative isn't the loudest name in the Sephiroth division, but they're almost certainly underrated, and that's usually where the dangerous teams hide.

SgtGeneral didn't win any individual draft battle by a landslide, but round after round, this roster came together the right way. The foundation is genuinely elite: Bijan Robinson (RB2) and Christian McCaffrey (RB3) arriving as projected starters give this team a ceiling most managers in the Sephiroth division can't match, and both came at slight value relative to their ADPs. The Mahomes-Rice stack is the kind of connective tissue that separates good rosters from dangerous ones, though Rashee Rice (WR13) carries real uncertainty after a suspension, a late-season IR stint, a coming knee absence, and now reported probation trouble that could cost him more time in 2026. If Rice is healthy and available, he's still a WR13. If he's not, this roster absorbs it without panicking, because Jordan Love (QB17) and Zay Flowers (WR16) are both projected starters in their own right. At the 74th percentile of the field, SgtGeneral earned that standing the old-fashioned way: steady, round after round, no disasters.

Moore (S) (WR26 | $14 | 7.02), Xavier Worthy (S) (WR49 | $3 | 10.11), Travis Hunter (WR62 | $1 | 12.11), Deebo Samuel (WR70 | $0 | 17.02), Malik Washington (WR71 | $0 | 16.11), Brandon Aiyuk (WR81 | $0 | 15.02)

TE: Brock Bowers (S) (TE1 | $53 | 1.02), Eli Stowers (TE32 | $1 | 13.02)

SOLDIER First String landed at 78th percentile in the field not by hitting one home run but by grinding out a draft that tilted in their favor at almost every turn. The most illustrative example is Bo Nix, a QB15 projection scooped up at pick 8.11 when his ADP sat at 6.03, a two-plus round windfall that most managers would build a press release around. Pair that with D'Andre Swift landing a round late at QB, and the pattern becomes clear: this roster did not get lucky once, it just kept coming out ahead on price. The cornerstone is Brock Bowers, who went at 1.02 and projects as TE1, and even calling that a minor reach undersells it, because locking up the field's top tight end before anyone else could act is the kind of decision that looks conservative in hindsight. Surround Bowers and Nix with a starting group that includes A.J. Brown at WR8, Omarion Hampton at RB9, and Garrett Wilson at WR17, and you have a team that earned its division rank the quiet, thorough way.

TE:

Knights of the Redzone didn't need a single lottery-ticket swing to land at the 81st percentile. They just kept winning exchanges. Jalen Hurts, a QB9 projection, slid nearly a full round past his ADP to Round 4. Jeremiyah Love came off the board a round late at RB13. Woody Marks fell more than two rounds before this team scooped him up. None of these are gasps-from-the-crowd moments, but stack them together and you get a roster where the manager consistently paid less than market rate without ever chasing desperation value. Ja'Marr Chase anchors the whole operation as a WR2, and Jayden Daniels sits at QB5, giving the team a genuine ceiling to pair with all that draft-room patience. The 2025 season, a 36-percent win rate at the 24th percentile in scoring, is context worth acknowledging, but rosters are built, not inherited, and this one looks considerably better constructed. Third in the Sephiroth Division feels like a floor, not a ceiling.

ChocoBo Knows didn't win the draft on one spectacular gamble. They won it the way a good poker player wins a long session, by consistently getting slightly better than they paid for. The headline steal is Matthew Stafford, a projected QB14 who fell all the way to the 8.09 pick despite stacking neatly with Puka Nacua, a projected WR1. That Stafford-Nacua connection alone gives this team a ceiling most managers would kill for at those acquisition costs. But the draft didn't stop there. Chase Brown lands as a projected RB11 and a clear starter, taken a full round after his ADP suggested he'd be gone. Ashton Jeanty, Derrick Henry, and Travis Etienne round out a starting group projected at RB7, RB12, and RB18 respectively, the kind of depth that keeps this roster competitive even when the inevitable injury luck turns against it. Across the whole board, ChocoBo Knows logged fifteen chalk picks and only two minor reaches against three genuine bargains. Sitting second in the Sephiroth Division and in the 96th tournament percentile, this team earned that standing one sensible decision at a time.

TE: Dallas Goedert (S) (TE15 | $6 | 7.06)

R(u)B(y) Weapon sits first in the Sephiroth Division and in the 97th percentile of the field, and the draft sheet explains exactly why. This roster was built with patience and board awareness, collecting value at nearly every turn: six good values, one steal, and just two minor reaches across the entire draft. The steal headlining that haul is Kenneth Walker III, a projected RB10 who fell more than two full rounds past his ADP, landing in a lineup that already features Jahmyr Gibbs at RB1 and Breece Hall at RB14. That kind of depth at the top does not happen by accident. Lamar Jackson, a projected QB3, came in just four picks after his ADP, and Quinshon Judkins dropped nearly two rounds to become a projected RB22 contributor. The two minor reaches, Dallas Goedert and Chris Bell, are hardly alarming in a draft this clean. When the weakest projected starter is Jakobi Meyers at WR45, you are not looking for problems to solve. You are looking at a finished product.
