Rankings are based on actual Scott Fish Bowl ADP from the FantasyLife Scott Fish Bowl tool. Note that in a major tournament like this with over 5,000 teams, there are miniscule degrees of separation at play. One player having a breakout season can drastically change a team's results.

These rankings are intended to be entertaining and add in a small way to a wonderful cause. Please consider donating to Fantasy Cares.

Blair Andrews sits third in the Tetris Division and in the bottom three percent of the entire field, which is less a red flag than a five-alarm fire with no hydrant in sight. The core problem is straightforward: the quarterback room is a liability masquerading as a position group, with C.J. Stroud projecting at QB22 and Cam Ward, the weakest projected starter on the roster, checking in at QB23. Andrews reached a round and a half early to get Stroud, and the return on that investment is barely league-average production at a position that can quietly sink a season in a format this deep. The roster's brighter spots, Ashton Jeanty at RB7 and Malik Nabers at WR12, were both major reaches in the draft, meaning Andrews paid a premium for the only players capable of carrying a week. When your floor and your ceiling both depend on guys you overpaid for, there is no correction available mid-season. The 2026 outlook here is grim, and the standings are unlikely to be kind.

Ryan Howlett's 2026 roster is the kind of thing you stare at for a while before the unease sets in. Last year he finished in the 87th percentile, went 23-5, and looked like someone who had figured something out. This year he sits at 12th percentile and ranks 11th in the Tetris division, and the gap between those two versions of the same manager is genuinely hard to explain. The backfield is real, Christian McCaffrey at RB3, Saquon Barkley at RB8, and Omarion Hampton at RB9 projecting as legitimate anchors, but the draft around them was rough in ways that compound quickly. Howlett reached four full rounds early for Kirk Cousins, a QB35, and spent a fifth-round pick on Geno Smith, a QB30, burning capital that never came back. Brian Thomas Jr. arrived in round five as the presumptive receiver ace and comes with a genuine concern about his chemistry with Trevor Lawrence after a 2025 that disappointed. The reputation says 87th percentile. The roster says something quieter and considerably less comfortable.

Peter Gent's 2026 Scott Fish Bowl entry reads like a team that drafted with a plan and then watched the plan quietly collapse. The receiver group is genuinely strong, with Amon-Ra St. Brown (WR4), Drake London (WR7), Rashee Rice (WR13), and Garrett Wilson (WR17) all projecting as starters, and Patrick Mahomes (QB12) throwing to Rice as a stack gives the roster a real ceiling play. But after that the math gets discouraging fast. The running back group bottoms out around RB31, the draft produced zero steals and two major reaches, and the team sits tenth in the Tetris division and in just the 19th percentile of the field. There is no obvious fix in sight. Isaiah Likely (TE13) moving to the Giants under John Harbaugh at least offers some upside at tight end, but Gent will need projections to break heavily in his favor across the board just to claw toward respectability. Some seasons you are managing a team; this one, Gent may just be managing expectations.

Drew Prawel enters 2026 sitting ninth in the Tetris division and projecting in just the 39th percentile of the field, and the draft record does not inspire much confidence that better days are coming. The headliner is Brock Bowers at TE1, a genuinely elite anchor, and Jayden Daniels at QB5 gives the roster a capable second cornerstone, but after those two the talent thins out quickly. The real damage was done in the draft, where Prawel logged three major reaches and zero steals. Keon Coleman, projected WR91, was taken a staggering 5.8 rounds before his ADP, a bet that consumed real capital at pick 14.04 and left the rest of the roster leaning on projected starters like Matthew Golden at WR52 and Caleb Williams at QB6, himself a reach taken 1.2 rounds early. With the good values scattered across the late rounds rather than the early ones, there is no obvious move that reshapes the outlook. Bowers can only carry so much.

Doug Burrell is sitting at eighth in the Tetris Division and only the 41st percentile of the field, and the roster offers precious little reason for optimism. The top-end talent is real enough: De'Von Achane projects as RB6, Jaxon Smith-Njigba as WR3, and Tucker Kraft as TE5, a genuinely strong trio at the top. The problem is the depth behind them. Once you get past those names, the projected starters include Khalil Shakir at WR51 and Parker Washington at WR35, and those are the floors you are being asked to build on when injury or variance arrives. The draft did nothing to tilt the odds, either: Burrell went chalk on 17 of his selections, generated zero steals or values, and used his most notable departure from consensus to take Tyquan Thornton at WR97 a staggering five-plus rounds ahead of his ADP. That is not the draft of a team threading a needle, it is the draft of a team that ran out of needles. Without a clear upgrade path, Burrell looks like a manager hoping his stars stay healthy enough to paper over everything else.

Bobby Lawrence's 2026 roster sits at the 58th percentile of the field, seventh in the Tetris division, and that feels about right. This is not a team built on a single dominant pillar or one glaring weakness, it is a team where the margins decide everything. George Pickens at WR10 and Chris Olave at WR11 give the starting lineup genuine upside at the top, and Trey McBride at TE2 is the kind of foundational piece that quietly wins weeks. The quarterback situation is where the fine print matters most: Jared Goff has quietly finished as a top-10 quarterback four straight seasons, and with Detroit's offense fully intact around him, the floor is real even if the ceiling is capped by his lack of mobility. A 2025 season that produced an 89 percent win rate suggests Lawrence can build a lineup that grinds, but 2026 offers no clear upward gear shift. Four values in the draft, zero steals, twelve chalk picks. That is a roster assembled carefully, not boldly, and careful rosters live and die by whether the middle of the lineup shows up.

Pat Thorman's draft reads like a quiet confidence play, nothing flashy, just a steady accumulation of edges that adds up to something real. The clearest example is Mike Evans, a WR27 projection snagged a full round and a half after his ADP, which is the kind of free value that compounds when you collect it across a roster. Stefon Diggs and Chigoziem Okonkwo arrived on similar terms, both sliding past their ADPs by more than a round apiece. Against that backdrop, the Michael Mayer reach at nearly five rounds early is a genuine eyebrow-raiser, but one swing in the wrong direction barely dents a draft built this consistently. At the top, Drake Maye projects as a QB2 and Justin Jefferson as a WR6, giving Thorman a pair of anchors that most managers would have to surrender draft capital to land. Travis Kelce, back for another run and chasing top-12 relevance at TE, only deepens the picture. Sitting 59th percentile in the field and sixth in the Tetris division, Thorman has the kind of roster that sneaks into the conversation before anyone notices it arrived.

TE: Kyle Pitts (S) (TE7 | $20 | 5.01), Max Klare (TE- | $0 | 15.01)

John Bosch didn't win the draft with a single bold move, he just kept winning it in small increments, and the cumulative effect is a lineup that sits at the 61st percentile with a genuine ceiling above that. The centerpiece is a receiver group that reads like a fever dream, with Ja'Marr Chase at WR2, Nico Collins at WR9, and Emeka Egbuka at WR18 forming a top of the roster that few managers in this field can match. Lamar Jackson sliding to 2.12 when his ADP sat at 2.03 is a minor beat, but it's the kind of minor beat that adds up when the rest of the draft follows the same pattern, mostly chalk, no major reaches, and a couple of legitimate values. The one real cloud on the horizon is Marvin Harrison Jr., a WR33 projection who has spent two seasons failing to clear 900 yards and now pivots to Jacoby Brissett as his quarterback in Arizona, which is not exactly a stabilizing development. Still, when your weakest projected starter is Jordan Addison at WR43, you are building from a position of quiet strength.

There was no single moment where 9 Blocks in a Wild Bowl won their draft, just a steady accumulation of good decisions that added up to something real. Josh Allen at QB1 anchors the roster, and Brock Purdy at QB13 gives this team a credible backup who can step into a starting role, though Purdy's situation deserves a close watch given the uncertainty surrounding his weapons in San Francisco. The more telling story is how this team built value quietly across the board: CeeDee Lamb fell nearly a full round past his ADP, Tee Higgins slid almost two rounds, and Javonte Williams came at a discount too. Five value picks against just two major reaches is the kind of draft ledger that reflects a manager who stayed patient and let the board do the work. The result is a team sitting at 65th percentile in the field, fourth in the Tetris division, with a starting group headlined by Allen, Lamb, Derrick Henry, and Higgins. That is a core that belongs in any conversation about contenders.

TE: Tyler Warren (S) (TE4 | $31 | 2.10), Brenton Strange (TE17 | $5 | 11.03), David Njoku (TE29 | $1 | 14.10)

Alex Rikleen's 2026 roster reads like a draft clinic, and the numbers back that up: seven values, one outright steal, and just a single minor reach across the entire board. The steal is Jaylen Warren at RB27, snagged three full rounds after his ADP, the kind of late-round patience that separates disciplined managers from lucky ones. Up top, Jahmyr Gibbs at RB1 anchors a genuinely elite group of projected starters, and the Jalen Hurts and DeVonta Smith stack adds a layer of ceiling that most rosters at this percentile simply cannot match. Hurts himself was a value at QB9, slipping a round and a quarter past where he was going elsewhere. Tyler Warren at TE4 was the one spot where Rikleen paid a half-round premium, and honestly, for a projected TE4, that is barely worth mentioning. After a rough 2025, this roster looks like the correction: third in the Tetris division, 76th percentile overall, built with the kind of quiet precision that tends to age very well by playoff time.

TE: Gunnar Helm (TE26 | $2 | 13.02)

Tyler Schmidt did not build this roster with one flashy swing. He built it pick by pick, and the cumulative effect is a team sitting second in the Tetris division and in the 81st percentile of the field. The core is legitimate: Bijan Robinson at RB2 and Joe Burrow at QB4 give Schmidt a foundation most managers would trade significant draft capital to own, and Burrow arriving at pick 2.11 against an ADP of 2.05 qualifies as a clean win in a draft where half a round is real money. The receiver group layered on top is where the draft really compounds, with A.J. Brown at WR8, Zay Flowers at WR16, Luther Burden at WR22, and D.J. Moore at WR26 all projecting as starters. That is not luck; that is a manager who kept finding acceptable value through the middle rounds and never panicked into a reach. The one exception, Jalen Tolbert taken nearly five and a half rounds ahead of his ADP, is the kind of single blemish that barely registers when the surrounding roster looks like this.

TE: Colston Loveland (S) (TE3 | $37 | 3.05)

Kyle Nash sits atop the Tetris division at the 94th percentile, and the draft log tells you exactly why: this was not a team built on one brilliant swing but on a relentless accumulation of small advantages that compounded into something formidable. Puka Nacua at WR1 fell to pick 1.05 when his ADP was 1.01, a minor gap that still means Nash landed the field's top projected receiver a tick late for everyone else. James Cook at RB5 slipped similarly, and Colston Loveland at TE3 came four picks after his average draft position. None of these are heist stories, they are the kind of quiet, consistent execution that separates disciplined drafters from lucky ones. Stack those values against a starting corps that also includes Ladd McConkey, TreVeyon Henderson, and Terry McLaurin, and the depth behind them reads like a roster that was assembled rather than stumbled into. After a 37th percentile finish in 2025, Nash has put together the kind of team that makes you wonder if last year was the aberration.
